Published for the Edification of Our Many Readers

Wilderswyl Interlaken.

I had a week at Geneva but nothing very exciting happened. The weather was too hazy to see anything so we made no trips, we never even saw Mt. Blanc which ought to be visible from our windows. I wandered about the place and talked on various international questions with an Englishman I met and the ladies of the party went shopping.

We left there on July 8th for Interlaken via Berne. It is a very pleasant trip going along the shore of Lake Geneva through endless vineyards, especially near Lausanne. Beyond Lausanne there is a place called Romont, a queer little town on a hill, with walls round it, and big round towers at the angles. Next comes Freiburg, another queer town with some of its old walls still standing, you can't see much of it from the station though but the little you can see is very pretty. Leaving Freiburg you cross the Saane by an iron bridge 250 feet high giving a fine view of the river curving through the valley. The next station is Berne where we changed cars. The first place of importance is Thun near the foot of Lake Thun, from here the road runs along the shore of the lake to Interlaken. Here we had to change cars again and I found that I was in trouble. There are two stations at Interlaken about a mile apart. My trunk was checked for Interlaken and the train I wanted started from Interlaken Oat. The train we were on went to Interlaken Oat, but the trunks were put off at Interlaken so we had to get off there also, recheck the trunks, take another train, stay in it 7 minutes change again for about 7 minutes more in the other train and get out at Wilderswyl. That little performance took 11-2 hours and I had to argue with various railway officials in a patois made up of German, French and English. It worked all right but it was a great strain on my nervous system, especially when the baggage master insisted that one of my trunks didn't belong to me. He kept looking at the Lucerne-Genève label which was 492, whereas the Geneva-Interlaken number was 491. Of course I lost most of my German in the excitement and we came to a deadlock, but finally I induced him to look at the other end of the trunk and straightened things out. This place, Wilderswyl or Wilderswyl-Gasteig, it seems to be known by both names, is a little village about 2 miles from Interlaken and very pleasant. We are at the Hotel Alpemore and are very comfortable. We look up the valley towards Lauterbrunnen, on the left in the Schynigge Platte, about 4000 feet above the valley, and on the right the Rorhenflub, leaving a gap between them which looks straight on to the Jungfrau (13,000ft). We look out of our windows onto the whole group, the Jungfrau, the Giltelhorn and Schneehorn and to the left the shoulder of the Ouch. All of these peaks are covered with snow and the contrast of their whiteness with the dark pine covered hills in the foreground is fine. In the evening after sunset, the glow turns them to a beautiful pink color which is simply superb.

We have had fine weather ever since we arrived and each evening they seem to be even finer than the previous one. We have taken several excursions from here already and are making the most of the good weather. Our first trip was up the Schynigge Platte, which is about 6400 feet above the sea. You go up by a rack and pinion railroad in about 1 1/2 hours. The road winds up the mountain first through green fields, then through woods and along a narrow ledge over the valley, rather uncomfortable if you object to high places, then through some more pastures, always going up until you reach the first station, Breitlanen, 5000 feet. Here they stop 5 minutes or more to give you a chance to see the view toward Interlaken and it is very fine. From here you go up, along some very "scary" places and go through a tunnel, coming out on the south side of the mountain. Then you forget your nervousness and simply take in the view. You look up the valley of the Lutschine and Lauterbrunnen, and on to the Jungfrau range the Eiger, the Monch and the Jungfrau, a new white tower over everything and compel you to look at them. You forget that you are going along a narrow shelf with a 3000 feet drop below you. The view gets grander and grander until you reach the terminal station. Here you get out and walk past the hotel to the Gummihorn, 6700 feet. Here you have one of the finest views in this vicinity I think. It is practically a complete circle except towards the S. E. where the Faulhorn cuts it off. To the northward you see the lakes of Thun and Brienz with Interlaken and the hills back of it, while to the south are almost all the peaks of the Bernese Oberland.

In front is the Maunlichen which covers the base of the Jungfrau group. To your right you look up the Lauterbrunnen valley and can see the Staubbach falling into it, (1980 feet) and at the end of the valley, the Lauterbrunnen Breithorn. To your left is the Grindelwald valley with the Great Schreckhorn and Lauterbrunnen at the end, with the upper and lower Grindelwald glaciers on each side. To the left of the Schreckhorn is the Wetterhorn and to the right you see the Eiger, Monch and Jungfrau with the top of the Finsteraarhorn just coming in sight over the top of the Eiger.

These are a few of the peaks that you see and you must imagine them with the sun shining on them and the snow on them glittering in the light. One can easily spend a whole day up here, just looking at the scenery. If you are interested in flowers you can spend your spare time in collecting specimens of the various kinds that grow all about under your feet. I know nothing about flowers but I recognized gentians, violets, forget-me-nots, buttercups, daisies and many others. We spent several hours up there and came away reluctantly. If you care for walking you can cross the ridges to the Faulhorn, a walk of from two and one half to three hours where you have practically the same view from a little different point.

Our next trip was a drive to Lauterbrunnen, about one and one half hours from here. You go up the valley of the Lutschine to Zweisimmen, where the Black and White Lutschine come together. Here you have a fine view of the Wetterhorn to your left. The road leads to the right following the White Lutschine, along a narrow valley just wide enough for the river, the railroad and the carriage road. On each side rise rocky cliffs which gradually widen as you approach Lauterbrunnen. As the valley grows wider you see beautiful green fields, dotted with chalets, sloping up to the cliffs. Lauterbrunnen is a little village mainly hotels, restaurants and shops and as you drive through it and turn to cross the river, you see the Staubbach falling into the valley to your right. There was a breeze that afternoon which blew the spray up the valley so very little reached the ground. We drove along for half an hour more as we were going to the Trummelbach. There the water has worn a cleft in the rock so that you cannot see the whole fall but only get glimpses of it at different levels. You go into a sort of cavern at the bottom of the cliff, perhaps 20 feet wide, on one side of the wall is a hole two and a half by three feet in diameter through which comes a jet of water which flies across the cave breaking into spray on the opposite wall and falling to the bottom where it runs out. After you have been sufficiently drenched with the flying spray you come out and climb up a pathway which leads you to a bridge above the jet where you can look down on it. From here you go up still higher to a point where you can see the water falling through the cleft which it has worn in the rock, and still higher there is another sort of cavern where it falls into a basin and comes out again sideways, as it does below, but this time through a slit instead of a hole. Altogether it is very curious and interesting but to my mind is not as fine as the big leap of the Staubbach. We were very lucky, as it has been rather a wet season and there was a good head of water, so that the fall was very full.

On Saturday we went up to Murren which lies on the mountain above Lauterbrunnen. You go by train or carriage to Lauterbrunnen and then take the funicular for Murren. It has a grade of 55 to 100 and takes 25 minutes to go up. The line is straight and it is not so unpleasant as some of the ones which curve. In those caves it seems almost as if you swung out from the side of the mountain when rounding the curves. However this is sufficiently bad and I spent the time of the trip in studying the bottom of the car. They say there is a fine view on the way up, but I don't know anything about it. After reaching the top of the funicular you change to an electric tram and go airily skating along the edge of nothing for 25 minutes more until you reach Murren. On the way you have fine views of the Jungfrau but when you reach Murren, it is mostly hidden by the Schwarz Monch. The view from Murren is very grand and gives you a fine idea of the size and height of the Jungfrau peaks. You look across the valley and see the Wengernalp railroad winding up to Scheidegg and have a fine view of the precipices and the numberless streams running from them. The view is grander but not so extensive as that from the Schynigge Platte. It was so warm that we did not attempt to climb any of the peaks back of Murren from which the view is more extensive but contented ourselves with strolling through the village and looking at the queer chalets and watching the natives cut hay. Owing to the peculiar railroad arrangements in this country we had to leave an hour earlier than was necessary to catch our train at Lauterbrunnen and spend that time there instead of at Murren. They bring each train from Murren down about 15 or 20 minutes after a train leaves Lauterbrunnen and from an hour to an hour and a half before the next one is due to start!

They have queer customs here about their trains: in the first place they never start on time, unless you count on that fact and are late yourself, then they do.

Of course there is no crowding for they only allow just so many people in each car. The other day 6 of us started to enter a car in which there seemed to be plenty of room (the passengers were crowded to one side looking out the windows and there seemed to be empty seats,) but the guard wouldn't let us in until he had counted them and made sure there was room.

I heard a story at Geneva which shows how they do things here. Two English ladies boarded a train just as it was pulling out of the station, which is forbidden. They had tickets for Lausanne but decided to go to some station beyond. When the guard came through they explained what they wanted and he said they must pay so much extra. It was more than they expected and one said to the other in English, "I believe he will put it in his pocket. Wait till we get to Lausanne and we will get the tickets there." The guard lifted his hat and said, in perfectly good English, "I will not trouble you for the extra fare ladies, it can be settled at Lausanne." When they reached Lausanne he appeared and said "Ladies, I must trouble you to come with me." He took them before the chief, who in this country has magisterial powers, and told his story, and they were fined 10 francs each for getting on the train while it was in motion and the same for insulting the guard!

A man told me he was taken before a magistrate in Vienna for getting off a train before it had quite stopped and after pleading ignorance of the law and that it was the custom in America to step off before the train stopped he was let off with a severe reprimand!

It is rather tough on the free born American citizen to be restrained from risking his neck if he chooses, but it doesn't pay here. The railroad guards are very obliging and painstaking and try hard to make people go right even though they are bent on going wrong. I saw an instance of that today coming out from Interlaken. A man sat beside of me and suddenly addressed me in French. I didn't know at first that he was speaking to me and when I realized the fact, I said in English "I don't speak French," and I don't either except when I have to. He calmly went on, explaining that he had a cold and couldn't speak clearly and then repeated his question, to which I replied as well as I could. Then the guard came along and he handed out a ticket to Lauterbrunnen. The guard punched it and told him that he must change. Then the man became excited, showed another coupon to Grindelwald and said he wanted to go there. They argued for some time, the guard asking why he had shown that ticket and the other claiming it was a round ticket and made no difference. Finally the guard went off and took up the other tickets, then came back and drew a plan of the road, which divides a little way from Interlaken, one branch going to Lauterbrunnen and the other to Grindelwald, these points being connected by the Wengen alp road. Your tickets take you either way. All this he carefully explained saying that if the man wanted to go Grindelwald he should have said so. To make a long story short the guard finally told him to go to Grindelwald and he—the guard—would explain the mistake and fix his ticket, which he did. They have one great scheme here. You can get subscription tickets good on any road, with two or three exceptions, which are available for a certain time. For instance for 55 francs you can get a ticket, 3rd class, good for 30 days, that will take

LAYING OF CORNER STONE OF NEW CONG'L CHURCH

Impressive Ceremony Last Saturday at Newton Highlands.

Notwithstanding the rain, which somewhat marred the pleasure of the occasion, the exercise of laying the corner stone of the new Congregational church at Newton Highlands was held successfully Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

A goodly company was present and after the singing of the Doxology, which was led by the Rev. M. M. Cutler, supported by Mrs. H. L. Tewksbury, the invocation was offered by the Rev. M. C. Ayers, formerly editor of the Boston Advertiser, now a resident of this village. The twenty fourth psalm was then read by the Rev. G. G. Phipps, formerly minister of the church, and then the hymn, "O God beneath thy guiding hand," was given out by the Rev. M. M. Cutler. This was followed by the reading of letters by the clerk, Mr. W. B. Wood, from neighboring ministers, Rev. Dr. Henry J. Patrick, pastor Emeritus of the Second Congregational church, West Newton; Rev. T. P. Prudden, the present pastor; Rev. F. S. Hatch, acting pastor of Eliot church, Newton; Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church and Rev. John Charlton, pastor of the Methodist church, Newton Highlands.

A letter of congratulations and best wishes was also read from Ex-Mayor Edward L. Pickard of Ansburdale. Following this Mr. C. S. Luitwiler, chairman of the advisory committee read the list of the contents of the copper box presented by E. B. Badger and Sons, copper smiths, of Boston. The box contained the following articles: Boston Transcript of June 14 and Newton Graphic of June 16 containing prospectus of proposed new church; Boston papers of current sembly dispersed rejoicing that one more step had been taken in the enterprise dear to so many.

Mayor Weed's address was as follows:

It is with great pleasure I bring you the greetings of the City today. I can say with all sincerity that I believe you have the hearty good wishes of all citizens in this enterprise in which you are so successfully embarked. To one in my position it is a matter of great comfort, particularly at this season, to find a public undertaking, so important and beneficial in its character, for which it is unnecessary to make any provision in the tax levy.

We are accustomed to pride ourselves on the fact that church and state are entirely separate. We believe thoroughly that they must be kept so. Yet it is not inappropriate to remember that Newton had its first organized political life as a christian community and this church is one of the lineal descendants of the church of that day.

And it is certainly true now as it was true then that no community can be well ordered in its civic and political life without making a large appeal to motives and principles which are properly religious. The true essence of religion is faith in the unseen and ideal. And it is always the ideal which inspires devotion and heroism. Men must have something to believe in, to love, to serve and to fight for.

You are laying the corner stone today of one of those instrumentalities by which the attention and thought of men are to be directed towards the unseen and the ideal, a place where their faith in the unseen shall be re-

One of the earliest ecclesiastical memories I have is connected with a similar function in far away English city. I recollect at this day the crowd of clergy, the singing boys, and above all the manly form of Bishop Magee of Peterborough Cathedral, who was to lay the stone, a man large of body and mighty in intellect. Little did I then think that I should be permitted to take part in a similar occasion in New England.

And I suppose that most of us some years ago could hardly dream that on our site of today, a fair, stable house of worship would be erected, alike a joy to our congregation, and a satisfaction to our neighbors, as the letters read by the clerk testify. But the unexpected comes in the history of the church as elsewhere, and we rejoice today in the way we have been led.

We ask ourselves, How did it come about? And immediately to some of you, longest in relation with this church, there rise the forms of many a saint since departed either to other fields, or to the reward of the presence of God, who was faithful in the duties of office, or the more precious duties of spontaneous affection. Other forms rise too, some of them actually here with us today, of men who came to us from other fields, ready and willing to work, who have built up the church of Christ in this place, men of more than usual business ability, and of more than usual public spirit. We remember no less those of our city, who live distant from our locality, yet glad because of our progress and helping it forward. But above all there is the article of faith, to account for that which we see and hope today. For men and women dared to say "Let this be done, and lo! it is being done."

One other question arises, namely, what shall this church mean? It means a beautiful monument for our city. It means also convenience in our church life. It means also wider space and ampler doors for our hospitality. It ought to mean a nobler worship and a deeper, wider more searching realization of the word of God. But it means more. It means that once again a company of believers, entering into the labors of other men, themselves did what they could in time, patience, and gifts, to set up she too for that matter, both sexes work, begins hard labor in the fields at 5 or 6 yrs of age. The result is that you see boys of 15 or 16 who seem to be regular animals. Their faces are stupid, and they walk with a heavy plodding step, some what like the gait of an ox, none of the springiness that you would expect to find at that age.

By the time he is 25 he is an old man, dull looking, bent and heavy. They have no vivacity, being very different in that respect from the Italian of the same class. I don't recall having seen one laugh and I don't see why they should either, they have nothing to laugh at. They are harnessed into their carts as children, and are kept at it till they die, the only difference being that they have to haul heavier loads when they are older. Of course I am speaking of the "bauer" the tiller of the soil as he appears here. I haven't seen anything of the noble, freedom-loving Swiss peasant of literature. This fellow hasn't brains enough to love anything. He can't even cheat you with any lightness, as the Italian does, and I don't care much for Italians either!

There may be a better variety of peasant somewhere but I haven't come across him yet.

And as for the language he talks! Heaven only knows what it is. He doesn't talk very much and hardly knows enough to answer when you greet him. We have asked our way once or twice from field laborers and have never got any information. I didn't mean to start on a dissertation on the Swiss peasant and think I had better stop. I see I have spun this letter out beyond the bounds of decency so I will leave the account of our trip to the Eiger glacier until another time.

I shall be very glad when the time arrives to go on board ship and start for "Sam's land." There are many things here that are worth seeing and that one ought to see, but there are also many discomforts.

The Waltham School of Business.

This school differs from the ordinary commercial school in many respects. The most important is the method of testing the pupils. The Principal believes that a practical knowledge of business can be acquired only by actual experience, and that the ideal business school must aim to give this practical experience as far as possible before graduation. It must do for the future business man what the training school does for the future nurse and the normal school does for the future teacher—prove his abilities and detect possible weaknesses by successive trials under actual conditions; that is, give him practical experience in business houses. The Waltham School of Business has already made arrangements for applying this method in all of its course. Offers of assistance have been received from the most prominent business and professional men in Waltham.

Golf

The opening golf tournament was played on the Maplewood, N. H. course July 22, it being an 18 hole course with thirty entries. Mr. George H. Bond of Brae Burn Golf Club, West Newton, won the cup for the best net in class A with a 140-18-82. He was also winner of the cup offered for runner up. The most interesting match was that in class A between Walter M. Johnson and George H. Bond in the final Mr. Johnson defeating Mr. Bond by only one stroke at the last hole.

It pays the buyer to buy from an advertiser and to say he saw the article advertised in this or that paper. The man who mentions an advertisement when buying goods really gets the best possible service, even better than the regular customer when this is possible. Why? Simply because the advertiser pays good money for his advertisement and he is glad to hear from it. It is a compliment to his good business judgment.

D., the present pastor; photographs of the old meeting house, exterior and interior; sundry circulars and programs of installations and other prominent events including the 25th anniversary and laying of the present corner stone; church treasurer's printed reports from 1896 to 1904; Ladies Church Aid treasurer's printed reports from 1897 to 1904; Church Aid Secretary's report for 1904; by-laws of the Sunday School; church manual of 1880; Church manual in present use; list of church membership from organization to date; historical sketch of the church prepared by Deacons William C. Hyde; list of contributors to building fund of new meeting house; City of Newton Manual for 1905; key to old chapel; coin of current year and business cards of Hurley Brothers, contractors for the stone work of new edifice.

Mayor Weed was then presented, and in a few, well chosen sentences conveyed to the members of the congregation the well wishing of the city taking occasion to remark that the ideal life was alike the aim of the good citizen and the good churchman.

The corner stone was then laid by the Mayor, Mr. Edgar W. Warren, the chairman of the building committee, and the minister of the church. At this point a heavy shower came on and cut short the address of the latter. Prayer was then offered by the Rev. E. M. Noyes the pastor of the First church in Newton, the mother church, and after singing part of the hymn "Oh, where are kings and empires now?" which was followed by the benediction by the minister, the as-

I cannot but believe that such a faith and such an enthusiasm will find one of its most important manifestations in the civic life of the community. In our effort for good government we have appealed to the desire for comfort, to apprehensions for the safety of life and property, and perhaps most of all to the effort to reduce the tax rate. But these seem to be mean and inadequate motives for arousing men to great achievement. It is the city that might be, the city that ought to be, which will kindle enthusiasm and devotion. There is need of thinking more earnestly of a kind of civic life that is not yet, but that might be, and ought to be, and must be if the Kingdom of Heaven is to come.

This church from its first and unpretentious meeting house has sent forth many men full of the faith and enthusiasm of which I have spoken. It is because we may confidently expect the civic life of Newton will be enriched from here in even greater proportion in the years to come that this event, so happy to you, is one of importance to us all.

Rev. Dr. Smart said in part:

The occasion that calls us together is one of the rare events in the history of any church, and consequently it is to be remarked with more than ordinary gratification. It is a rare occasion even in older lands than ours, and is generally deemed an ample cause of rejoicing. And its rarity may be guessed in our own country, when we remember that structures have not been often built of material stable enough to outlast the memories of the present generation. It is therefore a pleasant thing to add a nother to the enduring monuments of our fair city, and to show to all men who pass by that the church of the living God is built to outlast many of the changes of human history.

another altar of worship, a home of the soul, a temple of God, a meeting place for all the virtues and aspirations of our joint spiritual life.

Long then may this building stand already sanctified with our ardent hopes, until it shall be doubly sanctified with pious memories of great souls who have here met God face to face, and then gone about in the streets of humanity to make Him known.

(This original hymn was written by Rev. George G. Phipps for the ceremony.)

Thou ever-present Heart of Love,
Soul of our souls, inspire,
That in this solemn rite we feel,
Thy touch of Heavenly fire.

With heart rejoicings would we come,
And prayers devout, for grace
From Him, the Living Corner Stone,
As now this stone we place.

Cement all hearts in faith and love
Firm as these walls shall rise;
And here, through years to come, accept
Thy children's sacrifice.

For thine own glory, Lord, we pray;
Send Thy good Spirit down,
And as this Corner Stone we lay
This church with blessings crown.

A review of the historical sketch prepared by Deacons Strong and May, a copy of which was placed in the box within the corner stone, is of interest.

Briefly may we summarize the incidents of the past up to this date. In Farnham's hall, Newton Highlands, the first religious service looking towards a church organization, was held, Sunday, November 12, 1871. This was an outcome of a fellowship meeting of congregational churches held at Newtonville. Monday, November 6, 1871, and eventuated in a society being organized January 30, 1872, with Mr. J. F. C. Hyde as moderator. A Sabbath school was also formed at the meeting November 12 through the efforts of Mr. Hyde and Mr. George M. Williams was the first superintendent.

At the First church, Newton Centre, a letter was received signed by Automobile Accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Whittemore of Newton, and their son Mr. David L. Whittemore, who are summer residents at Sias Point, Onset Bay, were victims in a serious automobile accident last Friday night.

They were driving along the Mattapoisett country road when a bicycle appeared in the roadway ahead, that blocked their passage, followed by another automobile. Mr. Whittemore's automobile turned out on the left side to get by and striking a stone was overturned. Dr. E. W. Egan of Onset Bay was summoned. Mrs. Whittemore's hands and arms were seriously injured. Mr. Whittemore was injured in the back and the son in the leg.

Mr. Whittemore is a brother of J. Q. A. Whittemore, with whom he is associated in the manufacture of shoe polishes in Cambridge. He has lived in Newton about 12 years, residing on Summit street. He is an enthusiastic horseman, owning several thoroughbreds, prominent among which is May King, a racing stallion. Accompanied by his wife and son, who is a clerk in the Cambridge factory, he went to his summer home at Onset the latter part of June.

Duane H. Church Dead.

Mr. Duane Herbert Church one of the best known inventors of watch tool and similar machinery in the country died suddenly Tuesday afternoon at his home on Valentine street, West Newton. He had been in ill health for several months with a complication of troubles but his death was not expected. Although a resident of West Newton for nearly 20 years he was but little known in political and social affairs preferring to devote his attention to his family and his life work, the devising of machinery to economize time and labor in the manufacture of watches.

Mr. Church was born in Hamilton, N. Y., 50 years ago and after attending the public schools he began his business life as a watch maker, finally establishing himself in St. Paul, Minn.

While there he became associated with another watchmaker by the Brunswick Mild High grade cigar sold by Hudson, druggist.

name of Gridley with whom he worked for a number of years, the two becoming known throughout the western metropolis as remarkably expert workmen. After thoroughly learning his trade Mr. Church moved to Chicago, where he remained for several years.

He became the western agent of the American Watch Company of Waltham and traveled over a large part of the country in the interests of that concern.

In 1882 Mr. Church came east and was at once employed in the company's main factory at Waltham, where he rose rapidly to the position of mechanical superintendent, which he held up to the time of his death.

More than 150 machines have been invented by him and are now in use by the company. As the result of his work, the whole watch industry has been practically revolutionized from what it was 20 years ago. A further result has been an increased accuracy in the production of parts of watches, particularly in the manufacture of pinions, balance staffs and other intricate metal pieces. A detailed account of Mr. Church's inventions and improvements would practically amount to a mechanical history of watch and watch tool construction.

In 1902 during the visit to this country of Prince Henry of Prussia, Mr. Church was an honored guest at the great banquet in New York of the "Captains of Industry," and was one of the speakers on that memorable occasion.

Though first making his home in Waltham, he soon removed to West Newton, and several years ago constructed a fine residence on Valentine street, where he had since resided.

He is survived by his widow, two sons and one daughter.

The funeral, which was private, was held on Thursday and the remains were removed to Mt Auburn for cremation.

SAINT MARGARET

By DEREK VANE

Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association

WHAT are you doing now, Stormont? Have you anything big on hand?" asked Jasper Farrell as he sat on the little veranda outside his friend's studio puffing contentedly at a fragrant cigar—a cigar quite out of proportion to his means, by the way; but, then, Jasper's income was small, and his tastes were large, so he did not let one interfere with the other more than was absolutely necessary.

Adrian Stormont lived at Sunbury in a little house with a garden running down to the river, and he was leaning back in a deck chair idly watching the boats as they went past with their varied freight; the men in white flannels, who were taking things easily because there was a girl on the red cushioned seat to talk to, and the club men in "sweaters," who gave no thought to girls as they flew along under the stern eye of the cockswain, but only to the coming race.

"I beg your pardon," Adrian said, remembering that he had been asked a question. "What am I doing, did you say? Well, nothing much just at present, but I am contemplating something big, though I don't know whether I shall ever arrive at it. I have received a communication from the ancient borough of Stonehaven making me a proposal to paint a 'St. Margaret' for their town hall. 'St. Margaret,' you must know, is the patron saint of Stonehaven, and they are very proud of her."

"Well, why do you hesitate? I don't see much difficulty about that. On the contrary, you are to be congratulated." "But that isn't quite all," said Adrian a little dryly. "St. Margaret is the type of all that is innocent and beautiful in woman. She is a pure, ethereal creature, bearing the martyr's palm and crown. As you know, my figure studies have been chiefly men. I have rarely employed a female model, and in any case no hired model would answer my idea of St. Margaret. So I am at a standstill."

"Oh, I know you have always fought shy of women and shut yourself up here like a Diogenes in his tub. You are almost as innocent of the world as a baby, but it is not quite the wicked place you fancy, and there are St. Margarets to be found in it yet."

"I don't know," rejoined Adrian, "that I have thought of it as very wicked, but the few women I have met have all seemed to me very much alike, not much better than we are. Now, I want a woman who is as different from man as light from darkness, whose innate goodness shines in her beautiful face, making it tender and pitiful to the sins she could not commit, but can understand—a saint to be worshipped and yet, his voice dropping, 'a woman to be loved.'"

"I am afraid I cannot help you. You want so much. She must be a beauty and a pattern of all the virtues as well. The two so seldom go together, you see. Virtue is rightly considered as the privilege of the plain. And she must be a model, you say, or I know a very nice little girl—"

"Oh, no, not a model," interrupted Adrian impatiently. "Fancy a creature who simper to you for so much an hour posing as St. Margaret!" Jasper shrugged his shoulders. "As I said before, your notions are a little exaggerated," he remarked. "Why can't you idealize, like other men? Saints don't come and sit for their portraits unfortunately."

"I am not so unreasonable as to expect my ideal complete in the flesh," replied Adrian, "but I must have youth and innocence at least. I must paint my saint from one not altogether unworthy to stand in her place."

There was no reply. Jasper was smoking, and his thoughts seemed to have drifted away. But presently he roused himself. He blew a ring of smoke slowly into the air and watched it fade before he spoke. Then he said:

"I think perhaps I can help you after all." He spoke very deliberately, as though he were weighing each word.

Adrian turned to him eagerly. "Really? I shall be very much obliged to you if you can."

"I know a girl who should suit you well in every respect if she will consent to sit," he went on, still in the same deliberate way. "She is beautiful—with the beauty of a saint or an angel; there is something almost unearthly about it—and, very slowly, 'I have never heard a word against her.'"

"But will she come? Do you think you can persuade her to sit for me? Is she a friend of yours?" Adrian poured out his questions, too eager and interested to notice the strangeness of Jasper's manner.

"I have known her some time, and I will make the proposal to her if you like. She has a widowed mother to support—it is astonishing how many widowed mothers there are in the world who need supporting—and that may influence her. It won't be such drudgery as teaching. I suppose I may offer liberal terms?"

"Anything you like if she will suit. When can I see her? She is teaching, you say, so perhaps it would be convenient to her to come down some evening for an interview?"

"I think not—I mean it is rather a long way to come so late—she is living in London," Jasper replied, with old embarrassment. "But if she will consent to sit for your sweet saint I will tell her to write and make an appointment to see you. I have not much fear but what you will find her all that you desire."

So it was settled, and Jasper shortly returned to town. He would not listen to a word of thanks from Adrian, interrupting him unceremoniously when he would have expressed his gratitude.

Adrian waited in some anxiety for the result of his friend's negotiations and breathed a sigh of relief when he had a little note saying the writer, who signed herself "Bernice Kerr," would call on him that afternoon.

And when he saw her he was not disappointed.

She was young and fair and full of grace. Tall and slender of limb, she stood before him, with her snow white skin, her red brown hair, her deep violet eyes—eyes that shone like stars in her pale face. As Jasper had said, there was something almost unearthly about her beauty. It was so pure and spirituelle. The mind could harbor no evil that gave expression to such a face.

Adrian stood a moment, motionless, almost holding his breath. Was he dreaming? Had the St. Margaret of his visions come to life? He had seen so few women that she seemed to him a veritable miracle. He did not notice the shabby setting of the room, the too sharp outlines of the delicate cheek and chin, the deep shadows under the violet eyes, for they but gave the touch of pathos which completed the picture. He wanted just that wistful expression, the knowledge of past sorrow and suffering deepening the starry eyes.

A slow smile came over her face as he looked.

"Shall I do?" she asked softly.

He awoke with a start. "I beg your pardon, I"—he stammered. Then he stopped and recovered himself. "You will do perfectly," he said gravely. "If you will honor me by sitting for my St. Margaret I could ask for no better model."

"Shall I do?" she asked.

She looked at him a little thoughtfully. "Very well," she replied. "I will come tomorrow if you like. I am free every afternoon."

The first time she sat to him Adrian saw that she knew how to pose herself; he had only to suggest and she seemed to fall into the right attitude at once. As she stood on the throne, crowned with palm, holding up a cross, her white robe falling back from her lovely arms, the light of glorified martyrdom shining in her face, his heart beat faster and his hand almost trembled. Could he do justice to such a picture? Was his hand strong enough to cope with a masterpiece of the great Creator?

As time went on Adrian discovered that she had charms of mind as well as body; when she began to talk at first she was very silent and reserved—he found that she had many original thoughts and graceful fancies.

Perhaps the pleasantest half hour in the afternoon was when she came down from the throne for a rest and the housekeeper brought in tea. She was woman enough to appreciate the dainty arrangements of the tea tray, and Adrian liked to see her handling his old Worcester, pouring out his cream and eating his cakes; she seemed more woman than saint then. They would discuss the progress of the picture, for she could take an intelligent interest in his work, and he had more than once profited by her suggestions. It pleased him to see that, so far from her unusual occupation's tiring her, she seemed to enjoy it.

At last the day came when the picture was complete; the finishing touch had been given, and even Adrian, who was always his own severest critic, was fain to acknowledge that he was content. It was a worthy St. Margaret; from the sole of her foot to the crown of her head there was no blemish in her.

"I am not like that," Bernice said softly when they had stood a few minutes side by side in silence, absorbed in contemplation of the lovely figure, poised so lightly that it almost seemed to be soaring upward. "You have idealized me."

"Not very much, I think," Adrian answered gently, and when he turned round there was a look of worship in his eyes. "A little more saint, a little less woman, perhaps; that is all. She is worthy of you—and you of her."

"Don't say that!" she cried harshly, moving away from him. "You don't know—you can't tell! I am no saint."

"Saint enough for me," he said tenderly, holding out his hands to her. "Bernice—my St. Margaret!"

But she flung up her hands to her face, shrinking away from him.

"Have I startled you, dear one?"

Didn't you know, couldn't you feel, that I loved you? I thought you understood me. At first it was all my St. Margaret—you were only the woman who could give me her face; then gradually it changed, and I forgot the saint in the woman. Do you wonder that this is so dear to me?—pointing to the picture. Do you wonder that I have painted it as I never painted anything before? You were my inspiration.

There is the genius of love in every stroke. It is yours far more than mine. "And now," with a little happy laugh, "I want to come down out of the clouds; I want you, Bernice, nothing and no one else—not even St. Margaret. I want a wife just like any ordinary man who has not vowed that art shall be his only mistress and spend half his days in dreams and visions. Won't you speak to me? I have thought you cared for me a little. Don't say I have been mistaken."

The happiness died out of his voice and face as she still held herself away from him and gave no sign.

Presently she looked up, and he uttered a cry of dismay when he saw her face. It was white and cold—frozen, it seemed, into a look of stony despair—all its beauty gone, the starry eyes dull and heavy with pain.

"What is it? What have I done?" he asked breathlessly. "You are ill—suffering. Bernice, for God's sake speak!"

"I am going away," she said, and each word cost her an effort. "Have mercy and don't stop me. Go to Mr. Farrell; he will explain everything—I can't." And she turned to go.

Cold with undefined fear, too bewildered to speak, he made no effort to detain her.

"Forgive me," she murmured, dropping at his feet and passionately kissing his hand. "I didn't know what I was doing. Try and forgive me—by and by." The next moment she was gone.

Some hours later he was still sitting in the same place, his arms thrown on the easel that bore the picture of his saint, his head buried in his hands, when the door opened and some one came in. It was quite dark in the room now, and he could not see who it was. The intruder struck a light, and, looking up mechanically when the gleam caught his eye, Adrian saw Jasper Farrell.

"Oh, there you are!" Jasper cried rather boisterously. "What! Worshipping at the shrine, eh? Let me have a look." And he stationed himself behind Adrian.

"Well, she's a beauty and no mistake. I congratulate you, old man. Don't you feel grateful to me? You could never have done that if I hadn't found you such a peerless model."

"Have you come to explain? Has she told you?" Adrian asked, speaking for the first time. "There has been some villainy at work. Make haste and explain if you don't want me to choke it out of you." His voice was scarcely raised above a whisper, but his hands were twitching, and Jasper moved a little farther off.

"What do you mean? I don't understand you. I give myself some trouble to help you out of a difficulty and in return you abuse me. I think it is for me to demand an explanation."

"I am waiting," Adrian said hoarsely. "I shouldn't advise you to play with me too long. I asked Miss Kerr to be my wife, and she turned from me in horror and dismay—not because she does not love me; that I am sure. She asked me to forgive her, but she would say no more. She said you would explain. Now do so."

"Her conscience is too tender," Jasper said, with a sneer, but he did not seem quite at his ease. "I suppose she was worrying over a little deception—a harmless little joke—we practiced on you, all for your own good."

He wanted a moment; his lips were uncomfortably dry.

"You want the little mystery cleared up—the little mystery that has been of such benefit to you, which has produced this beautiful picture—far the best thing you have ever done, by the way. If I were not such a generous man I should be inclined to be jealous. Very well, by all means. Miss Bernice Kerr fills quite a distinguished role at night, almost as distinguished as the one she filled with you by day, and far more famous. To be brief, she is a 'living picture' at the Palace theater. Her 'Ariadne' has been much admired, also the 'Will-o'-the-Wisp.' Her strange beauty and admirable figure make her eminently suited for this form of entertainment."

Adrian gave a stifled cry; it was as though a knife had been plunged in his heart. His St. Margaret poised aloft in the eyes of the multitude; her grace and loveliness at the mercy of their brutal gaze—of their coarse lips!

For the one that would see merely a beautiful picture and admire it as that there were a hundred who would see the woman behind it. He shivered as he thought of it. He looked upon his art as a sacred thing. He would have raised her high above the crowd, he would never have cheapened her in any way, however much it might have been to his advantage—and now he had done this thing! He had given to his St. Margaret the form and face of a woman who made a public show of her beauty night after night.

"You seem distressed. I was afraid you would be; your ideas are so ultra refined," Jasper continued in a more confident tone. "This is why I asked Miss Kerr to conceal her identity; if you had known who she was you would not have had her, and as she was so eminently suitable, that seemed a pity. I knew there was no danger of your recognizing her, as you never patronize music halls. She was very hard up some time ago, giving a few lessons at starvation prices, and I persuaded her to go in for the tubercular vivants, which are much better paid and not nearly such hard work. She didn't like it at first, but her mother and I together induced her to go on. Where was the harm? It is a perfectly proper performance—even an elevating one, some people say—and she was treated with every respect."

Still Adrian did not speak.

"She didn't like coming to you under false pretenses—it is only fair I should tell you that—but she thought she was under some obligation to me, and as I wished it she consented. I told her I was very anxious to find somebody to sit to you for St. Margaret and that she could look the part to perfection, but that as you were very particular it would be as well for her not to say anything about the palace. Perhaps she did not think the gulf between a saint and a living picture as broad as it seems to you. I do not see what there is to make such a fuss about. Miss Kerr is as good a girl as you could wish to find; I give you my word of honor for that."

"I do not need it. You understand me well enough to know what such a thing as you have done would mean to me, and you are only wasting your words. How I have offended you that you should seek such a revenge I do not know, but you may be content; it is all—and more—than you could have foreseen. Now go. I would not soil my hands by touching you."

And Jasper Farrell went, conscious that he cut but a sorry figure. He would have given a great deal to have made a dignified and imposing exit, but he felt like a whipped hound.

And Adrian sat on alone at the feet of St. Margaret.

Presently he looked up, and the slow color dyed his face as he gazed. He had done her a wrong, and she seemed to reproach him. She was no longer a saint, no longer a heavenly vision; he had dragged her down to the dust; he had exposed her to laughter and derision. The cross—the martyr's crown—he winced as he saw them; to his excited nerves it seemed as if he had been guilty of actual irreverence.

Send a St. Margaret to Stonehaven made in the likeness of a living picture—a picture known far and wide, no doubt! It was impossible. And he could not bear the silent reproach of her constant presence.

He took up a knife and made a step toward the canvas, but before he could strike his arm was seized. He looked round with wild eyes, scarcely conscious of where he was or what he was doing, and saw Bernice at his side.

"Not that!" she cried. "Not that! Kill me rather. It is my fault, not hers. I didn't realize at first all the wrong I was doing, but when I learned to know you and saw how you revered her—that you would not have a coarse thought associated with her—then I began to understand. . . . And then I was afraid to speak. How could you bear to think that a girl who decked herself nightly for the crowd to admire should sit for your St. Margaret?"

"I have found it all out now, and it was a cruel thing to do—how cruel I did not know. You believe that, don't you? I couldn't keep away—I was obliged to come back. I felt I must bear you say you forgive me, though I kneel at your feet all night. You hate and despise me so much that you cannot bear to look at her. I understand that—but I—I cannot bear to see her destroyed. She is mine as well as yours, and she means all the happiness of my life."

She was kneeling at his feet now, and her tears were falling fast.

"You are shocked and horrified that I should have done such a thing. It was not the life I should have chosen, but we were starving, and what could I do? It is so hard for a woman to earn a living. I don't want to make excuses. I know all you must think of me—I deserve it all. But—but do you hate me so much that you cannot even say a word of forgiveness? I will never trouble you again, but before I go just say, 'I know you did not mean to hurt me, Bernice, and I forgive you.' Only that."

As she spoke a great cloud seemed to roll away from Adrian's soul. Those tender words had pierced through the darkness, and he knew that though he had lost much he had not lost all.

"I know you did not mean to hurt me, Bernice," he said slowly, "but I shall not forgive you, because—I love you, and love has nothing to forgive. If I have lost my St. Margaret I have found you." And he raised her in his arms. "You don't want to go away now?"

But the mayor and corporation of Stonehaven had to go elsewhere for a picture of their patron saint.

"Forgive me."

Coming Attractions

Colonial Theatre—The brilliant engagement of Klaw and Erlanger's great production of the New England spectacle "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," at the Colonial Theatre, in Boston, is rapidly drawing to a close, and only a few more weeks remain in which to witness this most extraordinary entertainment. New Englanders should not neglect the opportunity to see what is undoubtedly the most unique and beautiful entertainment that has been placed before the public in years. It has drawn great audiences, and people have been attracted from far and wide by its many wonderful features. The play itself is one of the funniest ever written, and it is mounted and costumed in such a manner that whole columns have been devoted by the Boston newspapers to its remarkable pictorial charm. Klaw and Erlanger, who are world famous for their great productions, have never scored a greater success than with this, and it will never be forgotten by those who witness it. Orders for seats from out of town may be sent to the manager of the Colonial Theatre, Boston. The scale of prices is $1.50, $1.00, 75c, 50c and 35c, and remittances should be made by express or post office order.

Grand Opera House—The Boston Grand Opera House will open its nineteenth season on Saturday evening, August 5, with Mr. Howard Hall in "The Millionaire Detective," which will also continue the attraction all the following week. Miss E. Antonette Hardie will again be in the box office, and Manager Magee has reengaged the Nellie B. Chandler's Ladies Orchestra which has made a tremendous hit this summer at Cleveland, Ohio. Matinees will be given as usual on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday and the hours for both matinees and evening performances have been arranged for the special convenience of suburban and out-of-town visitors. The Grand Opera House is very handy to reach being just above the Dover Street ("L") Station. This will be the fourth consecutive season that Mr. Hall has been the initial attraction at the Grand Opera House and this will be the first appearance of "The Millionaire Detective" in Boston. "The Millionaire Detective" is a man of mystery, whose identity is not revealed until the last act. Mr. Hall and a strong company is promised by the management.

Keith's Theatre—One of the strongest and best balanced vaudeville programs of the season is announced from Keith's Theatre for the week of August 7. The headline entertainers for that week will be John W. Albaugh, Jr. and Olive May, who will be making their debut at this popular playhouse and will make their appearance in a delightful one act comedy sketch, entitled, "Lady Betty's Highwayman" from the pen of the well-known playwright, Justin Huntley McCarthy. The surrounding show is of exceptional strength and will appeal to theatre-goers of diverse tastes. "Prominent in the list will be the Elton Polo troupe of aerial gymnasts and acrobats; Mignon the Kookin, one of the prettiest and most graceful dancers; Dan Quinlan and Keller Mack, exceedingly funny black and whiteface comedians; Dixon, Bowers and Dixon, in clever acrobatic and eccentric dancing specialties; the Avon Comedy Four vocalists and funmakers; Vontello and Nina, exponents of physical culture and flying experts; and J. Warren Keane, a skillful coin and card manipulator. Galletti's dogs and monkeys have been specially engaged for the amusement of the juveniles; the Fadedettes woman's orchestra will make an entire change of selections of popular music and a complete new list of comedy and interesting motion pictures will be exhibited in the Kinetograph.

Tremont Theatre—"The Gezer of Geck" which has been playing to capacity audiences at the Tremont Theatre, will enter upon its third week at that cool and popular playhouse next Monday night, August 7. The engagement of this merry and tuneful musical comedy was originally limited only to four weeks, which will bring the run of the show up to Saturday night, Aug. 19th. Judging by the enthusiastic reports of those who have seen "The Gezer of Geck," it is a comic opera that will be found far above the average, and intending patrons would therefore do well to secure seats for the remaining two weeks, well in advance. To express the opinion of those who have seen the performance, the chorus is a gay, grand, gorgeous, golden, glittering, gleaming, gleaming, galaxy of girls. Matinees are given only on Saturdays at the Tremont during this engagement.

24 of its members, asking for a dismission in order to form a church in Newton Highlands, May 31, 1872. A meeting of those interested was held in the village hall, June 13 and at an adjourned meeting June 24 the articles of Faith were adopted and officers chosen.

An ecclesiastical council consisting of the six congregational churches of Newton convened in the chapel of the First church and unanimously confirmed the organization July 9, 1872. At this council 29 persons were constituted members.

Rev. Samuel H. Dana, now of Exeter, N. H., was invited to become the first pastor July 15, 1872. He accepted and was ordained and installed October 9, 1872.

Early in this year, owing to the energetic efforts of Deacon J. F. C. Hyde, a desirable lot of land was secured, largely donated by Moses Crafts, and a meeting house was erected, but only the chapel was finished. The cost was about $15,000 which was all pledged, but owing to losses sustained through the Boston fire in the fall of 1872, many subscriptions were not paid so the church was encumbered with a debt of about $4,000. The main auditorium was completed and dedicated January 25 1876. Owing to the illness of his wife Rev. S. H. Dana resigned May 15, 1877 and a unanimous call was given to Rev. George G. Phipps to become pastor and he was ordained April 4, 1878. In accord with the laws of the commonwealth, it was voted to dissolve the society, and to incorporate the church, Dec. 11, 1890. The Newton Highlands Congregational church held its first annual meeting as a corporate body, adopted bylaws and elected officers, Dec. 31, 1890.

Rev. George G. Phipps resigned Jan. 24, 1893 and Nov. 2, 1893, Rev. Charles E. Havens was chosen pastor. In May 1895, owing to impaired health, the church voted him leave of absence in Europe, continuing his salary and supplying the pulpit. He returned and preached with renewed vigor and ability until his resignation Jan. 2, 1901. Later he moved to Colorado Springs where he died August 11, 1903. Rev. George T. Smart, D. D., of Manchester, Vt., was called in February 1902 and was installed March 11 of the same year. The debt had been gradually increasing but on April 27, 1902, by the heroic efforts of Messrs E. W. Warren, S. W. Jones, C. S. Luitwieler and J. F. Pollard, pledges were obtained sufficient to extinguish it, and the notes and mortgages were publicly burned.

The old church having become insufficient in seating capacity a committee was chosen consisting of Messrs E. W. Warren, S. W. Jones, C. S. Luitwieler and George H. Mellen at the annual meeting Dec. 28, 1904. At a special meeting Feb. 28th 1905 it was stated that over $53,000 was available and it was voted to erect a building on the present lot. A building committee consisting of Messrs E. W. Warren, S. W. Jones and F. R. Hayward was chosen with full power to sell the old structure, but to retain the bell and clock.

An advisory committee was appointed consisting of Messrs C. S. Luitwieler, G. D. Atkins, E. P. Bosson, T. P. Curtis, G. H. Mellen, C. E. Hanson, Thomas White and W. B. McMullen and a furnishing committee, Meadames S. J. Hayward, E. W. Warren, F. G. Curtis, G. B. King and W. T. Logan, both committees to associate with the building committee.

The last meeting in the old church was held with appropriate services April 30, 1905, a touching incident being the funeral of Deacon John F. Eaton, in the afternoon. In the evening the Christian Endeavor Society met in the chapel and the closing service followed in the church.

The church has a present membership of 200 persons, six of whom are original members, who are loyal to its interests and consecrated to the work. It has been unfortunate in the loss by death of Deacon J. F. C. Hyde, May 2, 1898 and Deacon Albert F. Hayward May 2, 1899, both liberal contributors to the church.

The church officers are, Pastor, Rev. George T. Smart D. D.; Deacons, George May, W. B. Wood, W. C. Strong, one vacancy by death of John F. Eaton; Clerk, W. B. Wood; Treasurer, Sanford E. Thompson; Auditor, George May; Superintendent Sunday School, J. Weston Allen.

Through the courtesy of the Methodist brethren the morning Sunday services are held in their meeting house also the weekly prayer meeting and Sunday school. The bell that has for so many years summoned the members to worship awaits a recall to future service in the new edifice, and the organ and piano find a temporary home in the Methodist church rendering acceptable aid to both congregations.

The new church, upon which work will be pushed as rapidly as possible, will be constructed of Weymouth seam face granite, with Indiana buff limestone trimmings. It will be built upon a triangular lot facing the village square. The interior is designed to represent the spirit of the English parish church, with open timber roof and hammer-beam trusses and stone arches at the chancel and transepts.

The edifice has a center and two side aisles and will seat 525, not counting the gallery, which will seat 100 or more.

There will be two entrances, one from the rear of Hartford st. and another from Lincoln st. There will be a lecture room and Sunday school room seating 200, with a women's parlor and a primary classroom. In the basement will be a dining room with provision for at least 150 tables, as well as a commodious kitchen and a serving room. The interior wood-work of the edifice will be of quarter sawed white oak and the floors of Georgia pine. Electric lights will be installed and steam heat applied. The total cost will be from $60,000 to $70,000.

Whist.

It is somewhat difficult to find or to state a rule for the discard which is entirely satisfactory, because discards are made under such differing conditions. A discard may be of little consequence so far as it effects the strength of a hand; it may be of advantage, enabling the player to save one or two small trumps in ruffing, or it may be a very disagreeable necessity, when the player has not a card that he feels he can safely spare. It sometimes indicates weakness in the suit discarded from, and at other times strength. The discard of an eight or nine is generally to be read as the beginning of a trump call. The discard of the master card usually indicates absolute control of the suit. Besides these various meanings and conditions, there are other points to be considered, such as the best protection of the hand in view of the probable situations, the necessity of keeping honors guarded, the importance of not blanking an ace and of not discarding a singleton or all of a weak suit when it might be needed to lead to partner. Under these varying conditions it is safest to follow one of two rules, according to the situation.

"1. When there has been no indication of a superiority in trumps with the adversaries discard first from your weakest suit."

"2. When the adversaries have a declared superiority in trumps discard first from your best protected suit."

The first rule covers the ordinary case of a discard when there has been no marked indication of a superiority in trump strength with adversaries, and of course includes the case when partner has indicated trump strength. Under these conditions you naturally keep your long suit intact, as there is a chance of its being established and brought in. The discard from your weakest suit is merely throwing away a card or cards which cannot possibly be of any value to you or to your partner. It is, of course, somewhat of a disadvantage to thus publish information of the fact that you are weak in the suit discarded from, but that is offset by the advantage of keeping your good suits intact, and also by the possible advantage of being able to ruff the suit discarded from. Some unthinking persons ask, why not discard from your best suit first, and thus inform your partner of it? But a little reflection will show the folly of this. Length is an important, generally the most important, element of strength in a suit. This is elementary, but it may instruct some. The strength and value of a long suit is not so much in its high cards as in the number of cards and the prospective possibility of its being established and brought in, in which case every card of it is valuable. So long, therefore, as there is any hope of establishing your suit you should keep it whole.

This first rule, however, like all whist rules, must be followed intelligently and not blindly. If your weak suit is such that to discard from it must necessarily unguard an honor, so that a trick will probably be lost by so doing, you must disobey the rule. For instance, suppose you hold three spades, trumps, ace and five low hearts, king and one low club, and two small diamonds, and have to discard on the third round of diamonds, you would have to discard one of your small hearts rather than unguard your king of clubs. Similar cases will often occur and you must make allowance for them.

The second rule, when the adversaries have a declared superiority in trumps, discard first from your best protected suit, is based on several grounds. Under such conditions it is very improbable that you can bring in or even establish your long suit; to throw away a low card or two from it can therefore do you no harm, while in your weak suits, if you happen to have an honor, it may become valuable and win a trick, and as your weak suits are more likely to be your adversaries' strong ones, it is important to retain in them whatever strength you may have. Again, to make it the rule to discard always from weakness, as some otherwise good players mistakenly do, is to give the adversaries valuable information from which they cannot fail to derive advantage. That is the sort of information they are naturally most anxious to obtain. They will surely lead up to such weakness and gain advantage by finessing. By discarding from weakest suit, this information is given at once. By discarding from protected suit their must choose between two suits.—Fisher Ames.

Deals with big swings in them are always interesting, especially when the swing is brought about by brilliant play. Here is one played in the Hamilton contest at the last congress, in which the strong Minneapolis players showed the other fellows how to bring in a long suit. For the diagrams we are indebted to the Rochester Post-Express. Z dealt, turning the king of clubs, and A led to the first trick.

The play at table 1:

Y-Z make a slam.

Trick 2—Y overtakes his partner's King in order to prevent him from leading the suit again, as if B follows suit neither A nor B will have a spade left and it is impossible that Z can read the situation.

Trick 3—Number showing leads being used, Y can mark Z for a holding of five trumps originally, as he had but three suits and shows his longest plain suit to consist of four cards only. It may be possible to bring in the great spade suit if trumps can be got out before Z suffers another force, so Y starts his singleton Jack. B should cover, as Z had the King turned, but his failure to do so does not affect the result.

Trick 4—The shift to a diamond in order to get Z in the lead, and Z's refusal to finesse—which, as the cards lay, would have been fatal at this critical point—are beautiful plays, and well deserved the success which followed. The rest is easy.

The play at table 2:

TRICKS	A	Y	B	Z

Y-Z take 6 tricks only

Trick 3—The play of the first two tricks is the same as at the other table, Y overtaking the spade King in order that Z may not lead the suit again. But here Y did not have nerve enough to lead the trump for a big game. The finesse of Ace-Queen was unfortunate, as it lets A in to administer another force.

Trick 4—The other pair of the Minneapolis team held the A-B hands at this table, A, sizing up Z for four trumps remaining, rightly concludes that forcing is the proper medicine to give him.

Tricks 5 to 7—Z awakes to the fact that the spades are all with himself and partner, and makes a valiant, though futile attempt, to bring in the suit. He might save a trick by refraining from the third round of trumps, as he could probably make his 10 on a ruff, but he can hardly be blamed for drawing down the trumps to the extent of his ability on the chance that Y will hold a stopper in hearts. He probably misread B's unblocking play at trick 4.

Literary Notes.

Mr. Alfred Henry Lewis, editor of Human Life, the new 5-cent magazine that is proving so popular, certainly handles the Equitable and its would be saviors without gloves in the August number of that magazine. He says in part: However, it is all mere surmise. Mr. Ryan may not design any such white campaigns. Wherefore it behooveth the policy holders, who occur but as so many fish in the aphorism, to watch narrowly lest in the recent turn of affairs it prove for them only a simple case of out of the Hyde-Alexander frying pan into the Ryan fire. As was said, up to this writing no man has lost money by keeping an eye on Mr. Ryan. Nor would a prophet be able to promise that a trifle of present vigilance will not on the part of the Equitable policy-holders pay a profit. A cat in a dairy, a fox in a barnyard, a wolf in a sheepfold are one and all natural objects of distrust, and Mr. Ryan should be the last to complain if the suspicions of six hundred thousand policy holders follow him up and down when he goes on roaming the stage as the sudden, self-elected guardian of those $400,000,000. That surplus is yet gasping with the terrors of what dangerous times it has passed through; small wonder then if its palpitations continue, for a season at least, upon discovering itself in the abrupt, not to say indurated fingers of Mr. Ryan. Before leaving Mr. Ryan to go upon a survey of Mr. Morton, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Westinghouse—that Horation quartette whose duty it now is to hold the bridge in favor of those $400,000,000, and buckle their against destruction—there is a final thought entitled to a recount. It is the natural fruit of that non-understandable sale of his stock by the money-loving young Mr. Hyde for two and one half millions less than the Harriman offer. True, young Mr. Hyde hated Mr. Harriman, as witness his hysterical outburst during that stormy session of the Equitable directory when Mr. Schiff and Mr. Dills approached the brink of blows. But young Mr. Hyde's hatred of Mr. Harriman should not be explanation enough, for our violet-wearing feeblest is not one to hate an enemy $2,500,000 worth. How, then, shall a fair mind account for his sacrifice of that fortune when he sold to Mr. Ryan? The puzzle of it, I confess, goes far beyond my snail-like powers, and I may only repeat how much it has that the Hyde-Ryan sale is with the last of it just no sale at all, and Mr. Ryan—for certain anti-Harriman reasons of his own—has only loaned young Mr. Hyde his name and his personality, as one might loan a rain coat and an umbrella, to save him from the present pelting storm. That is the rumor, and I give it for what it is worth.

Trolley Express.

By special authority from the Legislature, granted in Chapter 202 of the Acts of 1903, street railway companies may act as common carriers of baggage and freight. The permission of the local authorities, and the approval of the railroad commissioners are first necessary, however, and the permit can be properly restricted and safeguarded for the benefit of the public.

The Boston and Worcester Street Railway Company, with its usual progressiveness has taken an active interest in developing this class of business and has received all the necessary permits from the cities and towns through which it passes with the exception of Newton. It has on two occasions attempted, without success to receive this permission from the city, and it is the purpose of these articles to enlighten our citizens upon this matter.

The Boston and Worcester Company serves a territory extending from Brookline to the city of Worcester with branches to South Framingham and Marlboro. It has opened up a district which, while near Boston, has not hitherto been a part of the metropolis on account of inadequate means of transportation. From a passenger point of view, the B. and W. has been a great success, for it furnishes a splendid roadbed, beautiful cars and prompt and rapid service. With such splendid facilities in the way of transportation, the public now demands that the company furnish them with means of carrying their parcels and packages to and fro as well as their persons.

The common carrier business, which the company proposes to inaugurate when the necessary permission is obtained, is not at all objectionable from whatever point it is viewed. With neat, trim box cars, such as is shown in the accompanying illustration, running on the double track of the Worcester road, the eye cannot be offended by the miscellaneous collection of merchandise, nor the passenger traffic impeded by the additional cars.

It is hard to see what valid objection can be raised to granting the company the right to act as a common carrier through this city. Proper restrictions can be imposed by the licensing board, and the proceedings are further subject to review by the board of railroad commissioners of the state. It would appear therefore that the city should be progressive enough to encourage rather than discourage a matter of this kind which eventually cannot help but be a benefit to the city at large.

How British Cities Manage Public Utilities

Manchester's Gas Works Alone Have Paid Into the City Treasury $13,000,000 Profits—Other Object Lessons

(Copyright, 1904, by Frederick Upham Adams.)

IX. MANCHESTER has owned its gas works ever since 1807, which was not long after this present necessity was discovered. Since that time the profits accruing and paid into the city treasury have amounted to the enormous total of $12,800,000. The plant as it stands today constitutes an asset having a market value of more than $13,000,000. Gas is furnished not only to citizens of Manchester, but to 30,000 customers outside the corporate limits. The rate charged is 60 cents a thousand cubic feet, and the net profit for the last fiscal year was $1,352,923. Of this sum $488,500 was paid into the city treasury in the form of taxes and a direct contribution, and the balance was devoted to the sinking fund or set aside in the contingent fund. The profits have become so large that the city has decided to discontinue the charges made for the use of heaters and ranges and give them to customers rent free.

For motor power a reduced rate of 48 cents a thousand is charged, and gas is used for this purpose in the running of 1,520 engines. Employed in the Manchester gas department is an army of 2,200 men, and their wages have been steadily increased in recent years. After an experiment lasting nearly a century it must be conceded that the public ownership of gas production in Manchester shows all the earmarks of success.

Manchester supplies electric light and power not only to its citizens, but also to neighboring towns and villages. The city embarked on this venture in 1893 on what was then considered a large scale, making an investment considerably in excess of $600,000. The first year of operation showed a loss of about $1,000, but the following year found a profit to its credit amounting to $28,000. The city was then charging 5.88 pence a unit for the current generated, but has gradually reduced this to 2.68. In the meantime its plant has been extended until it represents an expenditure of $8,500,000. The gross profits last year were $420,000, and after meeting interest, sinking fund and other fixed charges there remained $41,000, which was placed to the credit of the reserve.

The enterprise is not yet on a permanent basis for the reason that it is annually expending vast amounts for improvements and extensions, but even during this period it has managed to reduce its debt, increase its surplus and pay $200,000 toward the relief of rates.

It should be kept in mind that none of these enterprises is promoted or in any way sustained by money raised from taxation. The council committee in charge of them borrows the required money in the open market and goes ahead with extensions and improvements utterly independent of the city treasury. I am not aware of what would be the situation in the event of a failure of one of these enterprises, but presume that the city would assume responsibility for the payment of the bonds and liabilities. No such contingency has ever arisen, so far as I am informed.

It was my privilege to examine the official accounts and statements of the reproductive undertakings in the leading cities of Great Britain, and they unquestionably show without an exception that every bonded obligation has been met, that a proper amount has been set aside for sinking funds, that in a large majority of instances liberal allowances have been made for depreciation and that in every city visited or of which I have reports the tax rate has been reduced rather than raised as a result of participation in public enterprises designed to yield profits.

There is small reason for a potter's field in Manchester. The city maintains and manages at cost three large and beautiful cemeteries, having a total area of 220 acres. The charges for interment vary according to the size of the plot and location and range from $1.25 for a child under one month old to $30 for selected private graves. These prices include all fees, including, if desired, the services of a clergyman. The city also furnishes at reasonable prices headstones and monuments. For a charge of $1.25 annually the graves are kept neatly in turf, and for a slight additional charge flowers are planted and cared for. By the payment of $25 a grave may be thus kept in perpetuity.

The importance of this institution will be realized when it is stated that the number of interments last year exceeded 8,000. There are private cemeteries in Manchester with more pretentious vaults, tombs and monuments, but it is kept in better order or has more ideal natural surroundings. The rates are charged from time to time so as to make these resting places of the dead self-sustaining. Manchester has expended nearly $1,000,000 on its baths and washhouses.

These are in charge of J. Derbyside, and his management of the complicated system is excellent. He took a justifiable pride in escorting me through the establishment on Osborne street. While there 500 boys from a neighboring training school came trooping in, and it was a lively sight to watch them disport in the great swimming pool. The water is automatically kept at the required temperature, and in all of its plumbing, fittings and conveniences the place compares favorably with those in the athletic clubs of our larger cities.

"You can hardly realize what this means to the people who live in this vicinity," said Mr. Derbyside, his fine face lightening as he gazed at the happy throng of youngsters. "There are thousands of poor persons in Manchester who have not a tubful large enough in which to hold water sufficient to properly wash one's face. Large families are packed into two small rooms, and there can be no privacy. For the benefit of such as these we have set aside certain days when they can have the use of the baths for the nominal charge of a penny. Thousands of them are taking advantage of this opportunity, and as a result the death rate is decreasing, and so is the percentage of crime. It was the same way with the washhouses. When we first started them the poor women did not know what it was to have clean clothing. It was a common thing to find the water flowing from the extractor very dirty, but the women imagined their clothes were clean enough. By force of example and constant explanation this has been overcome. They now take a pride in doing good work. For 5 cents in your money a woman can do a large washing and ironing and be finished in less than four hours."

School children are taught to swim, and classes are formed and drilled in life saving. Prizes are awarded for proficiency, and expert swimming has become one of the regular courses in a common school education. Although Manchester's bath system is now one of the best in the world, the plans for the immediate future contemplate almost double the present capacity.

The cleansing department of Manchester is probably the largest in the world and deserves a more extended description than that which follows. It is a distinct type of municipal enterprise and is a successful attempt to reduce to a minimum the expense and discomforts of street cleaning and the disposal of sewage. To this end the city has become a manufacturer on a large scale and is the landlord of a farming estate of 3,739 acres, or nearly six square miles of land. The cleansing committee includes the lord mayor as a member and is responsible for the sweeping and watering of streets, passages and courts and for the collection and disposal of night soil and other refuse from dwellings, warehouses and institutions. The committee employ 1,800 men and 420 horses, with large numbers of vans and carts, steam tugs, a fleet of boats, four locomotives and twenty railroad cars. It builds its vans and carts, keeps in repair the immense machinery plant and rolling stock used in the department, makes and sells brushes, brooms, receptacles for closets, manufactures concentrated manure, mortar, soap, oils, grease, disinfecting powder, dyes and many other products which otherwise would go to waste.

The manufacturing plant in the parish of Beeswick is one of the most extensive institutions in England, and a visit to it will well repay the municipal student who desires to become informed on the best modern methods of solving one of the great problems confronting cities.

Several years ago there were two great marshes situated in the suburbs of Manchester. One belonged to Lord Carrington and was called Carrington Moss. It was undrained and uncultivated. The city purchased it for $190,000. Near it was another tract of 2,595 acres belonging to Sir Humphrey de Trafford. This was in a deplorable condition. It was occupied by tenants who managed to eke out an existence and pay rent for their tumbledown hovels and boggy land. The city purchased it for about $700,000.

On both of these estates it proceeded to drain the land, tear down the old farmhouses and erect new ones. For a mile and a half the estate faces the new ship canal and will some day be lined with factories. In the meantime the city has built railroads which convey fertilizers from the city and carry back the farm produce raised by the prosperous tenants who now pay rent to the city. The largest farm on the estate contains 400 acres, for which the tenant pays $10 an acre. Valuable vegetable crops are raised, and where once was a dreary and disease breeding marsh there are now miles of fertile and productive land under a high state of cultivation. It is the verdict of the highest authorities that the Manchester system of utilizing refuse is the most perfect in existence.

The expense of the cleansing department for the last fiscal year was $670,000, and this was made possible by the fact that the receipts from the manufacturing plant and the farm estates reduced the cost by the impressive amount of $240,000.

Crystal Lake.

Though the courtesy of William M. Noble Esq we are enabled to give our readers some interesting facts regarding the rights of the public in Crystal Lake. The case is now before the Courts, on the finding of a Master from whose report we glean these facts:

Crystal Lake and its adjoining land was granted to Mr John Haynes in 1634 by the General Court, and his title thereunder rests in common with similar grants upon the charter granted by Charles I, March 4, 1629. Mr. Haynes was quite a personage in the pilgrim colony and was its Governor in 1635. He subsequently removed to Connecticut and became its Governor some years later. The lake has been known in the records as "the great pond," "Wisswell's pond" and as "Silver Lake."

The Master finds as follows: "I find that this 100 acres, as well as the 1,000 acres, i. e., all of the land of the grant, has come down to the present owners by a proper chain of title originating in the grant and by the action of the heirs of Governor Haynes."

There was no evidence offered as to what, if any, use the pond or its waters were put previous to the period of sixty years covered by the witnesses called by the petitioner except any that may be found in deeds or extracts from the same which appear in this report. By them it appeared that the pond had been used since for boating, bathing, fishing, and the cutting of ice by any one who elected to enter upon it, and no claim had been made by any one, either representing the Haynes interest or any one else, to control the same. It further appeared that at different times some bathhouses had been put upon the shore; that at one time when there was a drought some attempt was made to use the water and that the water had been used otherwise for baptismal purposes. In 1833 the city of Newton appropriated the sum of $500 to fix up the shore of the pond, and this was expended for that purpose. See Exhibit A for a copy of the order and proceedings thereon.

Upon September 12, 1870, the State, acting through its Commissioners on Inland Fisheries, executed a lease of the pond, Exhibit E, for the purpose of cultivating useful fishes, to certain parties for a term of twenty years.

I find that the grant of John Haynes was valid, and that upon the facts there has been no forfeiture of the grant under the ordinance of 1634, or the act passed in 1716, relating to the forfeiture of unused grants, hereinbefore referred to. If the State, through its officials, the Commissioners on Inland Fisheries, had not made a declaration of its title by granting the lease referred to, and action had not been taken upon the same, I should be somewhat doubtful as to whether the general use made by the public for many years of the pond would be in itself sufficient to oust anyone having the right to claim under the Haynes grant from the title in the same. But the Commissioners on Inland Fisheries, acting, as I believe, in good faith, gave this lease upon the belief that the pond was a part of the public domain, and while the lessees were limited in their use of the same, the indenture contains, as I think in effect, a declaration and claim of title on the part of the State; and the occupancy under the same for twenty years, coupled with the fact of the other use made of it by the public, as herein stated, during the past sixty years, satisfies me that the title to the pond and its waters, and the right to control the same, has become vested in the State by prescription. It is probable, as I think, that owing to the age of the grant, the fact that no one made any claim under it for many years, so far as it appears, and the use made of the pond by the public, that in 1870, or even later, the existence of the grant may not have been known to the commissioners, who may have assumed that this pond had been included in the ordinance of 1641-47, but whether ignorant of this or not, they, in terms, treated it in the lease as being the property of the State.

Mr Noble further informs us: "The case has been tried before a Master in chancery. He has decided that the pond belongs to the public and not to any private individual. Its real meaning is that we have a decision equivalent to the verdict of a jury which may yet be overturned when the matter goes before the court itself. If the Master's report is finally confirmed, it will mean that all interferences with the use of the pond by the public must cease. It will not disturb the ice houses and the ice men will have the same privileges as to cutting ice which they now have, but those privileges are exactly the same as the rights of any other member of the community, the law being that any one may go to a great pond and cut ice and that he may cut all he wants up to the point where he will interfere with others, and when that point is reached the law says the parties must divide equitably."

The Waltham School of Business.

We desire to call attention to the evening sessions of the Waltham School of Business. They afford to those who are unable to attend the day School an opportunity to secure much of value. No one appreciates more highly the value of an education than one who has unfortunately been deprived of it. No better instruction is given anywhere than will be given to those who attend the evening sessions of this school.

SARATOGA IN MID-SUMMER.

AMERICA'S REAL PLEASURE SPA.

The season is on! Saratoga, the one joyous, only true pleasure spot is reeking with fun! Thousands have already gathered at the famous Spa; Broadway and its line of magnificent hotels presents a scene gorgeous and dazzling in the extreme. Early morning sees handsome equipages driving back and forth; Congress Spring Park assembles hundreds seated at tables, talking and sipping the invigorating and health-giving waters. Noon, the cars and carriages are traveling in the same direction—"off for the races!" Have you ever witnessed the thrilling sport, which means so much to the summer Saratogian? Enthusiasm! Why there is nothing on earth to compare with a Saratoga race. Thousands of people, men and women, young and old, are in the grand stands. The paddock contains its usual throng of inside devotees. The sedate looking banker who has abandoned Wall Street for a few weeks is here; the loud dressed, sporty looking individual who is laying his plans to beat the "bookies" is on hand; a few rail birds, just to give a touch of realism to the scene, are perched on the fence; the midket jockies in their variegated costumes are curbing the prancing and impatient thoroughbreds. There is a loud murmur, a rumble of mirthful chatting and low laughter—what a merry looking assemblage! Cosmopolitan, gorgeous, democratic Saratoga! No care, no class! Common in purpose, in thought; the fever of the race is on. The barrier is up! They're off! The colored jackets are crowding on the necks of their horses. Not a breath in the grand stand, then a loud hurrah as the favorite sweeps from the field; silence, tense silence, as another swings free. They sweep into the stretch, two ahead; Neck and neck! The crowd is silent, the jockies are driving for their lives! The favorite falters for a moment; his rival forges a nose ahead; another cheer, and then an awful stillness as a shadow surges to the outside, swings into the open, and ere the thousands realize it an "outsider" has won the race! Evening—now paint Saratoga, and who will wonder why there is only one Saratoga? The verandas of the magnificent hotels are thronged with fashionably dressed men and women. In the spacious and fragrant court yards are hundreds more, walking or seated at the tables, quaffing cool drinks and breathing in the balmy atmosphere. The strains of sweet music float forth from the hotel verandas! Broadway is a promenade! Saratoga is at its ease. Do you live in New England? Get away! Go out to Saratoga! The season is on! The Boston and Maine Railroad is the only line out of Boston running through to Saratoga. Write and we will tell you how to go. For a two cent stamp we will send you a book describing the route: the title is, "The Hoosac Country and Deerfield Valley." D. J. Flanders, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Boston and Maine Railroad Boston.

The tax rate for the current year which we published last week is most gratifying to those who have been in close touch with city affairs and who had expected a much higher figure than $18.00.

That the increase is but twenty cents over the rate of last year shows extremely careful work by the Assessors, and bears evidence of the strictest supervision by Mayor Weed.

A careful review of the underlying causes of this high rate may be of interest to our readers. The meat of the matter is comprised in those little figures which adorn the tax bill, and we give the comparisons between 1904 and 1905.

	1905	1904
State tax	1.24	.79
Met. taxes	1.76	1.57
County tax	1.02	1.08
City tax	13.98	14.36

18.00 17.80

By these figures it is easily seen that the state and metropolitan taxes have increased 64 cents, while the county and city taxes have been reduced by 44 cents. To the state officials and the Legislature therefore belongs the entire responsibility of the increase and for much of the odium which attaches to a high tax rate. The figures which are published in another column give the details of the increase in valuations of over a million and a half. It will be noted that Ward Six continues to maintain its position at the head of the list in both personal and real valuations, although closely followed by Ward 7 in matters of personal estate. The total valuations of $64,635,370 show that our city still maintains its place as the richest city per capita in the state and is only outranked by Brookline in being the richest municipality pro rata in the commonwealth.

Newspaper reports from surrounding cities and towns state that these municipalities have all gone up on their tax rates, some of them having an increase of over a dollar. The heavy state tax is credited with these increases as in this city, and our legislators have a heavy problem to face at the next session of the General Court.

Contracts have been signed recently which will ensure greatly increased mechanical facilities in the GRAPHIC office for the coming season and we hope to give our patrons the benefit of the improvement in the early fall.

NOW is the time to destroy the gypsy moth eggs.

Newton Hospital.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees which was held at the Hospital on Tuesday August 8th the following Resolutions were passed in memory of the late Mrs. N. Emmons Paine:

"Gratefully we place on record our acknowledgement of the loss the Newton Hospital has suffered in the removal of our late associate trustee
Mrs. N. Emmons Paine.

None but those most frequently in contact with her unselfish efforts can feel the importance or estimate the value of her labors for the Hospital; earnest and tireless with views broadened by sympathetic intelligence and strengthened by exact information she worked with unceasing energy courageous simplicity a singleness of purpose for the welfare of this institution.

No more may we be stimulated by her resourceful cheery presence nor helped by her liberal thought; but we cannot lose her. The impress of the sweet nature and noble life she lived amongst us cannot fade; she has illuminated the way and elevated our work inciting us to continued endeavor in the higher service whereto we are impelled by remembrance of her rare enthusiasm and unflinching example."

Plans for the new Domestic Building to which Mrs. Paine had given so much time and thought have been perfected and the work is already under way.

The Administration Building is to be moved forward and refitted and a new Domestic Building is to be erected on the site of the old kitchen.

In order to provide for the demands for additional power contracts have been placed for a new Generator and Engine to be added to the present power plant.

Wrong to Scrape Moth Nests

In response to numerous inquiries, Superintendent Kirkland states that the practice of scraping gypsy moth nests from the trees is not an effective remedy, and will simply lead to more trouble from the caterpillars next year. Eggs scraped off and scattered in this way will hatch next spring and yield caterpillar swarms.

The correct way to destroy gypsy moth nests is to soak them with creosote mixture applied by means of a small brush. This preparation can be obtained at any of the seed stores at a small expense and may be applied to the nests at any time from now on.
Superintendent Kirkland urges citizens to treat the moth nests as fast as they are laid on the tree trunks fences, etc., making another examination of the trees after the leaves have fallen to destroy any nests which may have escaped observation.

EVENING SESSIONS.

The evening sessions of the Waltham School of Business will begin September 6, instead of September 18, the change of date being made at the request of several pupils who wish to begin as soon as possible.

The subjects regularly taught will be Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Commercial Law, Shorthand, Typewriting, and English.

Special attention is called to the subject of Book-keeping. The methods of recording transaction have undergone great changes. Many experienced bookkeepers indeed are in need of instruction in the new ways so great are the improvements.

Pupils who desire to do so may devote the whole time to English or to any other study.

There will be a special course for those who wish to fit for civil service examinations.

The School occupies the second story of the Waltham Trust Company's building.
The rooms will be open during August from nine a. m. to twelve m., two to five, and seven to nine p. m. The Principal intends to be there Wednesdays and Saturdays both afternoon and evening. For further information concerning either day or evening sessions, apply to the School in person or by letter.

The Professor and the Girl

By EDWIN L. SABIN

WHAT a shout went up! Four thousand people, packing the long grand stand, swayed on tiptoe and yelled and shrieked. A great flood of old gold in ribbons and banners leaped and ebbed in the afternoon sun. In front of the grand stand ecstatically gauged, with extravagant gestures, a dozen youths clad in old gold sweaters and flaunting to the breeze old gold blankets. Above all the tumult swelled clear and triumphant the ringing cadence of a college cheer. Opposite, seventy-five yards away across the field, was another grand stand, also packed with people. But its prevailing color was a sober dark blue, and it was very, very quiet.

In the old gold amphitheater Professor Andrew Stearns Beach, M. S., had been deep in musings upon the probable progress of the new slime molds which he had carefully incubated until that noon. He hoped that no one about the laboratory had molested them, even to moving a cover the fraction of an inch. On a sudden he was disturbed by the throng around him rising en masse to its feet, by the persons immediately behind him stepping on his shoulders and knocking askew his accurately adjusted hat, by his neighbor on his left recklessly overrunning him with dusty shoes and by his neighbor on his right springing from his eminently proper position by his side to dance upon the plank sent and wave her yellow flag.

Engulfed amid this whirlpool of excitement, the professor, somewhat dazed, forced his way to the surface and inquired anxiously of his right hand neighbor:

"What has happened?"

"It's over! Yes, it's over!" she cried, but whether in answer to his query was difficult to say.

"Ah," he hazarded, "is the game over so soon? And did we beat?"

She paid not the slightest attention to him—nor did any one else—and vainly he tried to peer between the heads blocking his view of the operations going on somewhere below.

"One! Two! Three! Four! Five!" sonorously chanted the crowd in a giant's voice.

An instant of expectant silence punctured by another tremendous outbreak of applause.

"One! Two! Three! Four! Five! Six!" bellowed the old gold army, and as it exhausted, its members sat down, carrying with them the still bewildered professor.

"Oh, wasn't that fine, though?" exclaimed the young lady whom he had ineffectually questioned, now settling herself beside him and turning to him a beaming face.

"I really am afraid that I lost track, a little," explained the professor. "My view was so obstructed by intervening bodies that—"

"Then you didn't see that splendid run?" asked the girl. "What a shame! Why, Burton got the ball in the middle of the field and just scooted with it right through the other team, and they didn't stop him till he had carried it over and made a touchdown! And Captain Thode kicked goal."

"And this means a point for our side?" commented the professor indulgently. "I infer as much by the very evident delight which was expressed. Well, I am heartily glad, heartily glad." And he pursed together his lips and nodded in approval.

At this moment a murmur of "Oh's" and "Ah's" mingled with other signs of pity and sympathy, passed through the grand stand.

"They're helping him off the field!" ejaculated the girl. "He must be dreadfully hurt. Just look how his head wobbles. I knew he must have been hurt. That horrid man who tackled him threw him as hard as he could on purpose!"

Two striplings in old gold jerseys were assisting the valiant Burton, who had been lying where he had fallen, to a vantage place where he would not be trodden upon. They deposited him under blankets before the amphitheater.

"Rah, rah, rah! Rah, rah, rah! Rah, rah, rah!" Burton's pealed the old gold cohort—the tribute paid a hero.

"Do you think he's very badly injured?" implored the girl of the professor, while watching with fascination the trainer kneeling over his latest charge.

"No, indeed," assured the professor out of his vast knowledge. "Football players are injured to knocks and wrenches. It is truly marvelous the amount of roughness they can endure."

A huge bunch of yellow chrysanthemums was handed over the railing of the grand stand and borne to the recumbent fullback, who revived enough to wave the flowers feebly, showing that the spirit was willing although, for the time being, the flesh was weak.

"There!" said the girl, with a sigh of relief. "Then in the center of the field a whistle sounded, and the game went on."

Now Professor Beach was free to resume that disconcerted train of thought regarding his slime molds. Naturally one would imagine that he would be thinking, if not of the easily absorbing struggling upon the gridiron, at least of his companion, for her name was Delphine Gray, and he was going to make it Delphine Beach. He had not yet told her of his design. That would be arrived at in due order. The professor was the living embodiment of method.

A little man physically was Professor

Andrew Stearns Beach, M. S., assistant to the chair of botany at the university; a little man—immaculate, important and the pink of precision. When he had resolved upon matrimony and had selected Miss Delphine Gray, he had not lightly come to this decision. But it had seemed only fitting and proper that an instructor of young men and women should be married. With that in mind he had noted Delphine among those attending a series of lectures by him for graduates and advanced students. She was, so far as he could observe, perfectly neat; she appeared to have depth, putting to him questions which indicated in a flattering degree that she recognized and appreciated his remarkable erudition; she lived in the town, and her family was good, which would make his position upon the faculty more secure and by influence might likewise aid him some day to be the president. Finally he concluded that Delphine, with whatever post-natal conformity his standards might require, would fill the bill very nicely.

In a letter to his sister he announced his intentions. His sister, a New England spinster who looked upon her brother as rather more than a god, read the announcement with a sense of awe at the immensity of the future in store for one unsuspecting girl. She wrote back immediately, beseeching her brother to be careful, and before committing himself to be sure that Miss Gray would be sensible of her high station.

The professor, having scrutinized Delphine under his microscope, discovering nothing to deter him, pursued a decorous campaign. He escorted her to the weekly meetings of the University Science club; at receptions he made a point of favoring her with a few polite little attentions, and at the dances which it was necessary that he grace he always solemnly whisked her twice around the room—himself being an execrable performer, having no idea of tune or time. He took her to an occasional athletic contest, although in his college days he had not "gone in" for athletics and indeed could not even now correctly differentiate tennis from football. And once a week he called at the Gray house to conduct a formal conversation, with Delphine alone or with the family in general—it mattered not.

The one thorn in the professor's flesh was Burton—the Burton at this moment lying on the side lines in front of the amphitheater and hugging a mass of yellow chrysanthemums while he watched his fellows strive to avenge his retirement by scoring another touchdown.

Burton was constantly interfering with the professor. Burton was so often about the Gray premises when the professor arrived for his regulation call. Burton lounged around in such an unconventional manner and threw into the exchanges of ideas unwarranted remarks which were wholly illogical and which interrupted the current of thought and produced distracting merment.

Burton it was who waltzed and two-stepped with Miss Gray until she was fairly gasping and was fain to plead fatigue when the professor of feral himself for the two precise circuits of the hall. Burton it was who daringly "stabbed" his way through the botany course and did it so cleverly that the professor vainly would corner him. And Burton it was who galloped the distinction of a mention in one of the professor's letters to the spinster sister.

"I still am favorably impressed with Miss Gray," the professor wrote. "I note that a Mr. Burton, a senior in the College of Liberal Arts and popular as an athlete is disposed to show her some attention. I have no apprehensions; nevertheless, maybe I ought to assert myself soon and thus possibly save him disappointment and her embarrassment and pain."

"If it seems best, then do so by all means, my dear brother," answered the sister. "Has Miss Gray ever read your master's thesis? That would present you in your true light as a scholar and could not fail to arouse her respectful admiration. It would nip short any tendency to waver between brain and mere brawn."

Obedient to the suggestion the professor safeguarded Delphine against the "I" on the breast of Burton's old gold sweater with his master's degree thesis, entitled "A Few Physiological Problems Afforded by the Rhaphidites of Leontodon Taraxacum." Delphine returned the document with so many arrows of pleasure in its perusal that the professor determined he could treat Burton with plying forbearance.

The football game ended—six to nothing. At the close a turbulent tide of old gold swept down, across the field and out of the big gateway, and high perched on its crest rode Full-back Burton.

Professor Beach, detaining his companion in the amphitheater until passage should be clear—he detested crowds—gazed on the scene with tolerant patronage.

The main injury to the fullback was heralded through university circles as a wrenched tendon of the leg, and, serious or not, it kept the doughty player out of classes. On the Monday after the game Professor Beach marked that Burton's chair in Section A, senior botany, was empty, and on Tuesday the vacancy still prevailed.

Possibly it was just as well to have out of the way temporarily a man about whom hangs the glamour of a sixty yards run for the only touchdown. However, Delphine, too, was absent from her section.

This complicated matters. The usual inquiries which he made of her acquaintances brought no definite information, and the professor experienced a vague worryment. She must be ill. Doubtless her temperament was of that fluently harmonized organism which can not endure the knowledge of suffering, and the sight of Burton waddling to his blankets had acted disastrously upon her nerves—that wretched Burton!

Tuesday passing and no Delphine, at 8 in the evening Professor Beach sallied forth upon the benevolent mission of ascertaining why. The maid who answered his ring seated him in the parlor and left him there among the bric-a-brac while she went to tell his presence. Thus abandoned to his own devices, the professor suddenly was aware of a faint, half familiar, yet indefinable odor—fume, essence, the barest trace—upon the air. He sniffed and knitted his brows in perplexity. Ah, he had it! Certainly! Very laudable in her too.

After a little delay Delphine entered, through the portieres, from the adjoining sitting room and greeted him with just a shade of confusion in her manner and just a tinge of heightened color on her cheek.

"I observed your absence from class," said the professor, plunging, as soon as the opening civilities had been consummated, into his subject. "I trust that the game had no unfortunate effect upon you."

"Not at all, thank you," replied Delphine. "I should say not—when we beat! But some matters came up—at home—which have kept me away from recitations."

"I perceive, though, that you have been doing laboratory work, notwithstanding," asserted the professor sagely sniffing. "Mounting slides, I presume? I am glad to find you taking such an interest in your work."

"Now, I want to know what on earth makes you think that," challenged the girl in laughing astonishment.

"Well, candidly, I—I catch the odor," explained the professor.

"I'm afraid that stuff you noticed and thought came from mounting slides or something of that kind is only a rub I'm using on my leg," volunteered Burton. "I've been staying here at the Grays' since I was laid up, though I told Delphine the house would get full of the odor and smell like a laboratory."

"The similarity is remarkable—very remarkable," stammered the professor. "However, I—I now can perceive the difference. Ah, a distinct difference!" Fumbling for his hat on the floor beside his chair, he hastily arose. "I will bid you both good evening. I—ah—merely dropped in on my way past, fearing that Miss Gray might be detained from her classes by illness. Good evening, good evening."

"And he didn't congratulate us!" laughed Delphine to her fiance as the footsteps of the late caller echoed down the front walk.

Warming the Meeting House.

Clarence King, the geologist, on a visit to Georgia during very cold weather attended a religious meeting of a colored congregation in a large and frigid meeting house without any heating facilities. Mr. King took an active part in the proceedings, writes Mr. Hague in "Clarence King Memoirs," and promised the shivering congregation the biggest stove he could find in Dahlonega.

He kept his word, and a large four foot stove, with ample lengths of electrically heated stovepipe, sufficient to carry warmth to every part of the room, was soon installed in the meeting house.

Two or three years later Mr. King again had occasion to visit the neighborhood. As he journeyed from the railway station he talked with the driver of the conveyance, a white man, concerning matters of local interest and inquired especially about the colored church and whether the stove he had sent was still doing well.

"Are you the man that sent that stove down here?" inquired the driver somewhat reproachfully. "Doing well?" he continued. "I should say so! There ain't a fence rail left in this neighborhood within two miles of that meetin' house!"

Would Add to His Labors.

The Rev. John Sabin, who for forty-one years was pastor of the First Congregational church of Fitzwilliam, N. H., was noted for his quick wit. One time when a motion to raise his salary was under discussion at the annual town meeting he suddenly appeared on the scene and asked his friends not to advocate an increase, as it was too much work to collect what they had already voted to give him.—Boston Herald.

A Mere Trifle.

Miss Fleyne—Oh, Mr. Nacoyne, how lovely of you to bring me these beautiful roses! How sweet they are—and how fresh! I do believe there is a little dew on them yet! Mr. Nacoyne—Well, yes, there is, but I'll pay it to-morrow.—Cleveland Leader.

ROMAN DICE THROWING.

Devices Used to Prevent Fraud in the Days of the Caesars.

The number of dice used was three, being marked with a minimum of one and a maximum of six spots. The most fortunate throw, called venerous by Cicero and basilicus by Plautus, was when the dice showed three seniores, or eighteen spots. The gravity of the losses depended naturally upon the amount of money at stake and the fines that were paid when the dice showed one or more ones.

It is difficult to explain what skill had to do with such a game. Still Isidore describes how inveterate gamblers could succeed in throwing the six and in avoiding the unit. In a graffito at Pompeii an honest player congratulates himself for having gained a good sum of money without fraud. Plautus dwells on these dishonest practices, to avoid which several instruments were invented, such as the horn and the fritillus.

It seems, however, that these instruments did not always fulfill their purpose. A third one was consequently invented in the shape of a tower, with a spiral staircase inside and a funnel on top. The dice, shaken first in the horn or in the fritillus, were thrown into the funnel and rolled down the spiral staircase until they landed on the table. Such precautions rendered cheating almost impossible.

INK THAT LIVES.

The Indelible Writing Fluid Used by the Old Irish Monks.

It is impossible to read the most ancient histories of the Irish saints without noticing how large a part books play in their lives.

In the library some cut the sheets of parchment or even sewed together in the neatest way the odd shreds, for the monk must not waste the gifts of God, especially when they are rare and dear. They polished it on one side until it was smooth and laid it near the scribe. Others prepared the peculiar thick inks of the Irish writers, very much like varnish, in different colors. The red was the most beautiful, and after 1,000 years it yet shines as the day it was first used. It was got from a kind of cockles collected on the seashore. Then there were black and green and golden inks, used in various thicknesses by the illuminators and the artists in miniature.

All these inks will resist chemicals that corrode iron. The ink was placed in thin conic glasses attached either to the side of the desk or to the chair, sometimes to the girdle of the writer, often fixed to the end of a pointed stick placed upright in the ground. It is owing to this peculiar skill in making ink that so many of the old Irish manuscripts have come down to us.—London Answers.

MISSING PERSONS.

Thousands Yearly Disappear and Are Never Heard From.

More than 5,000 persons annually disappear in the United States and are never heard from again. At first blush the assertion seems incredible, but police statistics furnish confirmation. The actual figures, based on a conservative calculation, are even more alarming than those given.

The tragedies of real life hidden within these peculiar cases, if they could be brought to light, would rival many of the novels penned by the world's greatest writers. No subject that can be imagined has such weird fascination as that of the thousands and thousands who have gone down this grand canyon of oblivion.

It would be possible to fill many pages with the absorbing stories of these curious cases, but nearly every reader of the newspapers, whether he lives in village, town or city, is probably acquainted with some instance of the kind concerning either friend or relative. Men and women who have lost all they treasured most in life in this manner go about vacantly, numbly, ever waiting for the return of the missing one—a dream that never comes true.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Trousers in England.

Strange though it may appear to the present generation, it seems that trousers when first introduced into England were regarded as anything but a mark of respectability. In the original trust deed, drawn up in 1820, of Bethel chapel, Cambridge street, Sheffield, there was a clause containing the following prohibition: "Under no circumstances whatever shall any preacher be allowed to occupy the pulpit who wears trousers." It is scarcely necessary to add that knee breeches and gaiters were then the correct attire.

A Filler.

"What's the reason you are so late?" demanded Mrs. Sulurban. "Well, you see," explained her bemuddled husband, "the train I came in on went so fearfully fast that we skipped several towns and had to go back after them!"—Detroit Free Press.

His Envious Position.

"Are you in any way related to the nobility, Mr. Goldwaller?" inquired the reporter. "Nope!" replied the rectangular but eminently astute old millionaire. "You see, all my children are boys!"—Puck.

Our Flexible Language.

"Pa, what does it mean when you say that one man completely overshadows another?" "Why it means that he outshines him!"—"Cleveland Leader."

Coming Attractions

Colonial Theatre—Klaw and Erlan-

ger's great New England spectacle,

"The Pearl and the Pumpkin," is near the end of its immensely successful engagement at the Colonial

Theatre in Boston. It will be seen there only until August 19th, after which the big production will be taken intact to the Broadway Theatre

New York, where it will be presented for a long run. This elaborate entertainment, justly termed the most popular of all productions past or present, will be witnessed in no other city in New England than Boston, and the coming week will afford people of this section of the country their only opportunity to enjoy the most extraordinary spectacle of the century. "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," with its gorgeous costuming, its marvelous scenes ranging from the green hills of Vermont to the lily fields of Bermuda, and its immense cast of famous performers, forms an entertainment that in beauty, novelty and splendor, will probably never be repeated—a statement in which all the newspapers concur. It is the most unique and magnificent production ever seen before the public, and it is the sensation of Boston. Those who are fortunate enough to witness it will never forget it, and it will repay

a long trip to Boston. It is impossible of description—so quaint, charming and thoroughly enjoyable it is—

and it must be seen to be appreciated.

Then the beholder will involuntarily remark, "What next?" Orders for seats from out of town will receive prompt attention from the Manager of the Colonial Theatre, Boston, to whom they should be addressed, accompanied by post office or express order. The scale of prices for the extraordinary attraction is $1.50, $1.00,

75, 50 and 35 cents, all seats reserved and dancers. The Fadettes woman's orchestra will make their usual change of program and an entire new list of comedy and interesting motion pictures will be shown in the kine-

Tremont Theatre—The merry

"Gezzer of Geck" which has enjoyed such a prosperous engagement at the Tremont Theatre, will enter upon the fourth and last week at that cool and comfortable playhouse next Monday evening, August 14th. "The Gezzer of Geck" is a musical pastime that is well named, for the music is tuneful and catchy, and the comedy, with which this offering so liberally abounds, is screamingly funny. The work of clever Dave Lewis in the Dutch comedy role of the sausage maker, who becomes the Gezzer or

Governor of a Turkish province, is especially good. Matinees are given on Saturdays only during this engagement. Those who have not yet seen

"The Gezzer of Geck" will miss one of the big musical hits of the year

unless they see it before it leaves

Boston. August 21 is the date set for the beginning of the regular fall and winter season at the Tremont, and the opening attraction will be

George Ade's comedy, "The College

Widow," which ran for 34 weeks at the Garden Theatre, New York, last season. The piece is the most successful that the author of "Fables in Slang" has offered playgoers, and Manager Henry W. Savage will present it with a cast of uncommon strength.

Klaw and Erlanger's production of the play "A Prince of India," by J.

I. C. Clark, founded on the late Gen.

Lew Wallace's story of the same title,

will be presented at the New Ameri-

cain Theatre in January next, following the new Drury Lane spectacle,

"The White Cat." This firm is making most elaborate preparations for the premiere of this play, which will be, with the exception of, "Ben

Hur," the greatest dramatic effort ever staged in this country. While abroad recently, Joseph Brooks, who is interested in this production with

Klaw and Erlanger, placed orders for armor costumes and ancient weapons with manufacturers in London and

Berlin after drawings made by archeologists who spent many months in the British Museum and the great museums of the continent in search of authorities. A feature will be made of the entr'acte and incidental music

as in "Ben Hur." Dr. Horatio Parker, professor of the theory of music at Yale University, has been engaged by Klaw and Erlanger to provide this feature of the production.

He is now in Europe at work on it and will return with the completed

score the latter part of September.

The selection of Dr. Parker to write the music for "A Prince of India"

was a happy one, for no composer, either in this country or abroad, is better qualified to provide it. His deep knowledge of all the ancient forms of music, combined with his mastery of melody and modern orchestral harmony, will have ample opportunity for full display in this drama.

The story deals with the period of the overthrow of the Greek empire by the Turks under the Sultan Mohammed, culminating in the siege and fall of Constantinople. Among other great characters is introduced the mystic Wanderer as the Prince of India. The period, story and locale of scenes

furnished a magnificent opportunity for unusually elaborate musical background. Not only the Greek and Byzantine music, sacred and secular, but the oriental love music and martial strains of the conquering Moslems of the fifteenth century are called for.

Klaw and Erlanger have engaged a notable company for this production.

Rehearsals will be begun in November.

PARAGON PARK.

Paragon Park the $500,000 wonderland at Nantasket, has frequently been compared to the similar resorts at

Coney Island. While the comparison is manifestly unfair from the fact that whereas Coney Island has greater New York, with its millions of population to draw from, and Paragon

Park has the much smaller territory of Greater Boston, it is agreed by all fair minded persons who visited the other resorts that Paragon Park does not suffer by the comparison. In point of artistic beauty and nighttime brilliancy Paragon Park is not surpassed by any amusement resort in this or any other country. Other parks may, and do have greater area and a greater number of side shows,

but Paragon Park is paramount in point of artistic beauty, general effectiveness and completeness. The management—and by that is meant

General Manager Dodge—has accomplished just what he started out to do —to wit, create the best possible park

in this part of the country. In including the Palm Garden as a part of Paragon Park, Manager Dodge built wisely for no other single attraction

in the park has proven quite so popular. The reasons are obvious. Here

one may obtain for a very reasonable sum a meal of as high quality as one could find in any city hotel. The surroundings are most congenial; it is always cool for the Garden is both large and well provided with windows. Indeed on all four walls there is practically nothing but windows.

The free open air circus was another master stroke of management. Here

the very best of circus acts are shown free of charge to all who enter. A fair example of what the program

always is may be had from the bill for this week. The Zoellers, who come direct from the New York theatre roof garden and are the only aerial performers who do the triple giant swing from the high trapeze, head

the program. Polk and Tresk, come direct from Luna Park. They are European gymnasts and head balaucefs and their work is said to be full of novelty. A wire walker and juggler who has not an equal in America is Forber, who is also on this bill. There is music in plenty for in all there are five bands and orchestras, including the Martland

Band and the Paragon orchestra in the Palm Garden.

MONDAY MORNING, August 14, at 9 A. M.

WE START OUR SIXTH
SEMI-ANNUAL REM-NANT AND AUCTION SALE, Better Known as

The R. & A. SALE

OUR Own Buyers, ably assisted by the R. & A. Syndicate, have made greater preparations for this Sale than ever before. To all who have attended previous R. & A. Sales it is unnecessary to say a word, but for the benefit of those who have not been present at any of our other R. & A. Sales would say that not any other sale begins to offer goods at such low prices; in fact, in many instances, it seems about like Giving Goods Away!

The 5, 10 & 15 Minute Sales conducted by Mr. Martin Hays of the Great R. & A. Syndicate have never been approached in the matter of prices at which goods are sold during these sales. The interest in these sales has been so great in previous seasons that many customers have come to the store early in the morning and have remained until the store closed in the evening.

We shall start this R. & A. Sale with a 30 Minute Sale at 9

Reclamation Work in California.

In a small room in the basement of the Chemistry building at the University of California in Berkeley, a station of the United States Geological survey has been established, on the work of which depends the success and progress of the vast irrigation and reclamation projects undertaken by the Government. The station is the only one of its kind west of the Mississippi, and there is no other in the United States with as complete an equipment or with work as vast in scope.

Thomas H. Means, engineer of soils of the United States Geological Survey, is in charge of the station. He is assisted in the work by Mr. Charles H. Stone, son of Mr. Fred. H. Stone of Baldwin street and a former resident of Newton, assistant analyst of the department. No irrigation or reclamation project from Mississippi to the Coast or from Montana to Mexico can be undertaken by the Government engineers without first consulting these two men and their corps of workers in the laboratory of Berkeley. Samples of the soil to be reclaimed must be sent to the Berkeley station to find out its agricultural value and the kind of irrigation and amount of water necessary to make it fertile; samples of the water to be used in the irrigation project must also be analyzed to determine the amount of mineral matter suspended in it, and the nature of the silt or sediment it contains. At present samples of silt from forty different rivers of the great Northwest are being analyzed by Chemist Stone, and on the result of his tests will depend the nature and amount of work undertaken by the Government in the districts mapped out for reclamation. The chemical value of the silt, its plant sustaining qualities and its alkaline properties are all carefully noted and placed in the records of the department.

The reclamation work of the Government has been one of the big undertakings of the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt. He, as much as any of the engineers of the Department of the Interior, under whose direction the work has been going on, is interested in the great economic work that is to make the trackless deserts of the Middle West blossom as the rose. In California three of these reclamation projects—the Klamath, Sacramento and Imperial—are already under way, and Mr. Means and his assistants at Berkeley are now making the tests that will determine the speed with which the engineers can proceed with the digging of canals and the building of reservoirs and the draining of land—for the reclamation work includes the redemption of swamp as well as desert country. Of these three undertakings the Sacramento valley work is the largest in scope, and before the task is completed will represent the largest piece of reclamation work ever undertaken by the United States. The great work of reclaiming the desert wastes of the Carson sink district in Nevada is almost finished. This is the largest work undertaken by the Reclamation Service thus far.

As the result of this great project over 200,000 acres of arid land in the Carson valley heretofore practically valueless has been made fertile and arable and worth in the neighborhood of $23,000,000. The last reservoir site on the lower part of the Carson river and the big concrete dam on the Truckee river, near Hazen, are still in process of building. The cement for this work is all being made at mills near Susan, and its strength is being tested in the laboratories at Berkeley. F. W. Huber, another member of the Geological Survey, is supervising this part of the work. In all, some 225 lateral irrigation and drainage ditches which will distribute through sections of four townships have been constructed in the Carson valley. These figures give some idea of the extent of the reclamation work.

A special feature of the Nevada work, however, has just been undertaken at the direction of Mr. Means. Leslie M. Simms of San Francisco has been sent by the Bureau of Forestry to Nevada to select the most arid and alkaline desert land in Nevada and send samples of the soil to the laboratory in Berkeley so that it can be thoroughly analyzed. After the necessary tests have been made Means will advise the method of irrigation to be employed and the experiment will determine just how far and with how much hope of success reclamation work in most unpromising regions can be pushed.

The Klamath project in Northern California and Oregon includes the draining of several lakes, including the Little Klamath, Feather and Tule lakes. Analyses at the Berkeley laboratories made by Mr. Stone have determined that the land at the bottom of these lakes is the most fertile agricultural soil in the world and the reclamation work will uncover over 100,000 acres of it for cultivation.

Tests of the soil and water in the Sacramento region are now being made, $1,000 having been appropriated by the last California Legislature to assist in defraying the expenses of the laboratory work. These tests are all being made in the rooms in the basement of the Chemistry building at the University of California, and at the same time 300 or 400 samples of soil and water from all parts of the United States and from every district where reclamation work has been suggested are being examined every week and reports are being sent out which determine whether it will pay to reclaim the land in question, and if so the method to be used. The work represents the latest advance in soil chemistry and agricultural science, and the station at Berkeley has the distinction of being the first and only plant of its kind in America.

Brilliant Future Predicted for Newton Man.

A recent issue of the Boston Record had the following interesting prediction of the future of Mr. James D. Colt, who resides on Suffolk road, Chestnut Hill:

Few outside of the legal profession realize the stir caused by the findings of J. D. Colt in the cases of the Stillings (whose sentence is expected today) and later in the Halght and Freese case. The public knows, of course, that these reports were interesting as matters of news; but they do not know how greatly the leading lawyers of the state were impressed by the logical and brilliant work of the investigator.

The best known lawyer of the state a man who is himself regarded as brilliant and remarkably successful, said yesterday:

"I consider it quite safe to say that, barring something now unexpected, the day will come when I shall see that young man sitting on the supreme bench of Massachusetts. I do not remember ever having seen from a man of his age a legal document more worthy the pen of a supreme court justice. In clearness of reasoning, in infallibility of conclusion, I regard the reports made by Mr. Colt as remarkable. If ever there were a case where a rise to the supreme bench could be predicted of a man of his age, I think it quite safe to make this prediction now."

Gypsy Moths.

Dear Sir:—In a number of different parts of the City clusters of gypsy moth eggs have been discovered. These egg clusters are in appearance a fuzzy dirty yellow blotch on the bark of trees about the size of a twenty-five cent piece. The eggs do not hatch out until next Spring and should be destroyed in meantime by painting with creosote. The moths laying these eggs have undoubtedly been blown in or brought from the badly infested territory north of Boston, and are widely scattered.

You will aid materially in preventing this pest from gaining a foothold in Newton by calling the attention of your readers to the matter and requesting them to notify the Street Commissioner's office whenever such egg clusters are noted, giving specific directions as to their location so that they may be readily found.

Yours truly,
Alonzo R. Weed, Mayor.

The Forest Question.

Mr. Frank H. Burt of this city, and editor of "Among the Clouds," the paper published at the top of Mt. Washington, has published the following interesting and timely letter on the Forest Question, addressed to Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire: Mount Washington, N.H., Aug. 3, 1905. Hon. J. H. Gallinger, Concord, N. H.

Dear Sir:—I am sending you several recent issues of "Among the Clouds," and take the liberty of asking your special attention to the letter of Professor Edmunds, printed July 31. He calls attention, you will see, to the fact that although your bill, known as the Forest Reserve Bill, allows the taking of forests by the government, yet the utmost that the Forestry Bureau recommend, and probably all that can be hoped for, is the taking of Lands Already Cut Over for reforestation.

While this is a purpose in which I heartily believe and would help in every way possible, yet I need not say it is a bitter disappointment to myself and thousands of others. We love these forests on the Presidential Range; we have camped and walked in them and have found health and pleasure there; I am told that there are no other virgin spruce forests in the country their equal. Never in the lifetime of any one now living will such a forest be reproduced as is now being destroyed. For three years we have seen them going, trusting that the influence of yourselves and your colleagues would speedily bring about the passage of the bill and so put an end to the destruction. Now the fact is all at once brought home to us that all our hopes have been idle and that even if the bill were to pass at the opening of the coming session it would not save a stick of standing timber.

Now the same thing which is happening on the north slopes is likely to be repeated even nearer Mount Washington. The recent auction sale of timber lands has left matters in shape, I understand, for the Bartlett Lumber Company, to begin active operations. Nothing in connection with the White Mountains has ever been such a surprise to the public and such a shock to their sense of the fitness of things as the news that Mount Washington was private property, subject to be sold on the auction block and stripped of all its beauty, when it ought to be a public possession. I see this feeling echoed in papers from places far removed and I hear it in conversation everywhere, and not among theorists and sentimentalists, but practical men of affairs.

While this feeling is in the air is the time for something to be done. The United States cannot help by the passage of your bill, unless it were amended to make the immediate taking of these forests mandatory. I assume you would say that that is not to be hoped for. The one thing left to save New Hampshire from lasting injury and disgrace is for the state to act. To wait for the regular session means two winters more of logging and the practical completion of the ruin of the scenery on the north side, to say nothing of what may happen nearer to Mount Washington. Will you not use your influence with the Governor to induce him to call an extra session and urge the immediate taking of the entire forest slope of the Presidential Range? There is every reason for doing it, and not an argument against it except the expense. I have the very best financial authority for saying that the state can amply afford it, with its excellent financial standing and small debt. Even the borrowing of one million dollars would increase the tax rate for the first year, according to the figures in one of the papers I have sent you, only two cents per one hundred dollars. The cutting of these forests will surely drive away the summer residents in the vicinity, to the great loss of the community, the injury to the lumber interests from the taking would be small, as it would remove only a few square miles of forest from their operations, and of course they would receive ample compensation in the purchase price. Nothing would so add to New Hampshire's prestige and the respect in which she is held throughout the country as the saving of these forests upon and around Mount Washington.

The question of the value of the water power to neighboring states, and other arguments which are justly urged as a ground for federal action, do not enter into the present question at all. Congress is manifestly not going to preserve the forests; the interest of the state demands their preservation for their scenic beauty and for the attraction of summer business; therefore the state itself should act.

I shall be very glad of a statement of your views on the matter and would only suggest in closing that if you are not fully informed on the conditions in the forests a trip to the Ravine House in Randolph and a short walk into the woods will show you just what has been done. I am sure you will then be ready to say that to allow it to go further will mean an irreparable loss to the state. Thanking you in advance for anything you may say in aid of the movement, I am

Yours respectfully,
FRANK H. BURT,
Editor of "Among the Clouds."

Turtlin' in Florida.

Sometimes the capture takes place a long distance from the camp, and a curious plan is resorted to, to get the turtle nearer. A stout line is attached to her and she is made to swim in the sea in the required direction, her escape into deep water being prevented by a couple of strong men at the other end of the line who lead her and check any attempt she may make in that direction. Upon arriving at the desired destination she is pulled up on the beach and again turned on her back to be disposed of at leisure.

When I went to look at our turtle by daylight and to help carry away such portions of the meat as we wanted, I was not surprised that it had given us so much trouble the night before. We estimated its weight as upwards of twelve hundred pounds, which is not unusual. Massive strength was written all over it. Its powerful jaws bespoke its carnivorous habits, and its muscular flippers indicated with what efficient strength they could be wielded to navigate the ocean's depths. Its shell was of some what soft and spongy texture, quite unlike that of the hawkbill or the green turtle, and like the bottom of some old ship returning from a long cruise, was coated here and there with barnacles. This shell has no commercial value, and when left upon the sand soon becomes disintegrated. Our happened to be the first loggerhead captured that season, and this accounted for the group of curious neighbors whom we found awaiting us as we brought our sailboat up to the wharf.—F. H. Gould, in Recreation for August.

How British Cities Manage Public Utilities

Glasgow's Profits From Its Street Railways—The "Common Good" Trust—Public Capitalism Armed With Franchises

GLASGOW first attracted world-wide attention by its handling of the street railway problem. George Francis Train, a tireless and brilliant American, was the first to propose street railways in Glasgow. This was in 1870. Mr. Train went to parliament for power to build lines in Glasgow, but the town council also petitioned for like power. A compromise was finally made by which the city built the lines and leased them to the company for a term of years expiring in 1894. The council drove a hard bargain with the company. The company was compelled to pay to the city the annual interest charge on the full amount of the investment, a yearly sum to the sinking fund sufficient to clear the entire cost of the lines by the time of the expiration of the lease, an annual depreciation charge of 4 per cent, so as to keep the plant in perfect repair, and on top of all this an annual rental of $750 a mile. The rates of fare were limited to a penny a mile, with morning and evening cars for workmen at a penny (2 cents) a ride to or from their places of employment.

The original company sold its franchise for $750,000, and the purchasers made money on the investment. Three years prior to the termination of the lease negotiations were entered into for its renewal. It speedily became apparent that the council and the company could not come to terms. The company owned the horses and the rolling stock and had secured a charter from parliament permitting it to buy omnibuses and cabs and to do business as general carriers. It imagined that it had created a monopoly and that it had Glasgow at its mercy. It refused to reduce the hours of labor for its employees or to agree to revise the rates of fare. Under no conditions would it agree not to compete with the city with buses and cabs, even provided a satisfactory purchase price were fixed.

It was a case of Scotch meeting Scotch, and the town council prepared for war. Parliament gave them the right to operate their lines, but they had less than two years in which to get ready. In that short time it was necessary to build barns, cars and all the traffic appliances; also to purchase and train thousands of horses. With a view of substituting electricity for horsepower it was decided to build the structures so that they could be used for either. When it came to the selection of a general manager the committee named John Young, and Glasgow never has regretted that decision. For years he had been at the head of the cleansing department and had brought it to a high state of efficiency.

The world is indebted to John Young for much of the progress which has been made in the scientific treatment of sewage. He established the great farms belonging to Glasgow, which now are fertilized with what were waste products. He abandoned what had seemed to be his life work and entered on a new and almost unfamiliar field of activity. He gave to it the full of a splendid executive ability. The officials of the private company sneered at the presumption of this "farmer and sewer digger." They called attention to the fact that it requires years of training and a special aptitude to properly manage street railway property.

Today John Young is president of the powerful Municipal Tramway Association of Great Britain and the admitted peer of railway experts. Street railway corporations in the United States, made the London county council, have also had him flatterers, but he will spend his life working for the city which delights to repose confidence in his honesty and ability.

Mr. Young invented a new type of car and ordered 300 of them. He erected nine stations, constructed car and repair shops, secured the United Kingdom, France, Canada and the United States for 3,000 horses, engaged and drilled 1,800 men and for two years worked day and night in preparation for the date set for the formal opening of the municipal tramway plant. At midnight of June 30, 1894, the private company withdrew its cars, and on the following morning the new ones were seen for the first time on the streets of Glasgow. They bore the now familiar sign, "Glasgow Corporation Tramways."

There was great excitement in Glasgow. The rival company was ready for the fight with 175 omnibuses, each drawn by three horses and manned on the best paying routes so as to "blunder" the car traffic. The city fired the first gun by cutting the former rates in half, and the buses were compelled to meet the rate. Steadily Mr. Young enlarged the service and lengthened the routes for which certain prices were charged. After sustaining heavy losses the company admitted itself beaten and retired from the field.

For the first eleven months of municipal operation the tramways showed a profit of $125,000. This result had been attained against severe odds. The city had to meet the competition of the old company, the winter had been one of almost unprecedented bitterness, the horses were raw and many of the men inexperienced, the fares had been reduced, the hours of employment had been cut from fourteen to ten, the city had purchased uniforms for its men, it had removed the unsightly advertisements which were a source of profit, it had been compelled to meet the innumerable expenses incident to the installation of a new plant, but despite all these items there remained a net revenue far greater than had been derived from the old company.

The second year of operation showed profits of $400,000. There is in Glasgow a treasury fund called the "common good," and into this the tramway department had agreed to pay $45,000 a year out of any profits which might accrue. This fund goes to investments for the good of the people, the upkeep of parks, the purchase of real estate, the maintenance of historical places, the entertainment of distinguished guests, the observance of anniversaries and for similar purposes. The fund is not supported from taxes and has many sources of revenue from estates which have been handed down for centuries. Outside of its annual payment into the "common good" the tramways do not pay a cent into the city treasury.

In 1897 the city took over the last of the private lines in or near the city. It increased the wages of its men $25,000 and again reduced the fares. In the annual statement the tramways committee called attention to the fact that the average citizen only faintly realized what was being saved by passengers on account of the longer hauls and lower fares. In that year it amounted to a total of $900,000, but despite this the enterprise paid $423,000. Mr. Young and his assistants were studying electrical traction and in the following year installed the first experimental line. This was so successful that it was decided to change the entire equipment. The last horse car disappeared in 1901, for which year the receipts decreased owing to the enormous expense and confusion incident to the change. The city invested more than $4,000,000 in new equipment, but the returns for the ensuing year justified the policy of those who urged the improvement. In 1902 the net profits passed the million dollar mark. The financial tale of Glasgow's municipal tramways is told in the following table of profits since the city decided to take control of the system:

	Net profits.
1896	$421,000
1897	416,000
1898	425,000
1899	493,000
1900	605,000
1901	624,000
1902	658,000
1903	1,045,000
1904	1,125,000

Last year the city reduced the hours of labor from ten to nine. Its profits have been so great that it voluntarily increased its payment into the "common good" from $45,000 to $125,000. There is no uniform rate of fare, and American readers will be interested in learning how much one gets for money expended for street car trips in Glasgow. According to the statistics in the annual report for last year, the average fare was about 1 1/4 cents in our money. For a cent one can ride on the average .58 of a mile; for 2 cents, 2 1/2 miles; for 3 cents, 3.48 miles; for 4 cents, 4.04 miles; for 5 cents, 5.80 miles; for 6 cents, 6.89 miles; for 7 cents, 8.15 miles, and for 8 cents, 9.09 miles. Eight cents is the highest fare charged, regardless of distance, but the average fare is less than 2 cents.

School children are carried for half fare, and a movement is on foot to issue passes to all who regularly attend the public schools. The cars are handsome, well lighted, clean and first class in every particular. The illuminated electric signs at the front and rear make it possible on the darkest night to distinguish one's car a square or more away.

The "common good" fund is doubtless the heir to the profits of the tramways. Not many years will elapse before the last dollar of indebtedness is paid. When that time comes nominal rates of fare will yield annual revenues of not less than $1,500,000. This and other donations will be expended for purposes indicated by the altruistic title of the fund. There is thus created a gigantic municipal trust, constantly fed from reproductive enterprises not under the control of the taxpayers. It is steadily increasing its holdings of real estate. Under the charter creating it there is practically no limit to the field of its activities. Already it is more opulent than any individual capitalist.

There is no more interesting social institution on earth than the "common good" trust of Glasgow. It proposes to appropriate to itself all of the enormous profits which accrue from the patronage of the public. It is public capitalism armed with a franchise unlimited in its scope. Against such a competitor it is impossible to form a private monopoly. The devout Glasgow millionaire, administering the affairs of his city with the same watchful care he bestows on his household, with the same shrewdness he gives to the bank of which he is a director, and with the same devotion and loyalty which mark his life as a churchman—this unconscious radical has done more to arouse wealth from its complacent and faulced security than the writings and rantings of all of the theorists who have lived and agitated for a century.

Mother's Rest.

Some readers may like to hear of a visit I lately paid to the Mothers' Rest in Newton Highlands. Although many may be familiar with that form of Newton charitable work, yet let me tell you about it as I saw it and learned about it from the pleasant and earnest worker, its matron, Miss Alice Creelman.

The home has been for the past five years located on the spot known as the old Winchester farm, on Winchester street. The house is the homestead of one of Newton's oldest families and first pastors. The house has been only slightly modernized, and retains its antique doors and windows, its many rooms and fireplaces and brick oven. Situated upon a high knoll some little way back from the street, surrounded by vast fields and large trees, is an ideal spot for rest.

At the time of my visit there were as its guests twenty children and thirteen mothers, and two more were to come. The greater part of their time was spent out-of-doors "under the trees, in hammocks, rockers, and swings, or the little ones in baby-carriages. Some mothers were reading, but most were simply resting. Three young ladies from Newton Centre were helping to amuse the children, while one with a horse and carriage was giving all a chance for a short ride. It was to her that I was indebted for my easy means of getting to and from the home. The mothers and children roam over the extensive grounds at will, but must always report at mealtime.

I said to the matron, "Now, please tell me about the simple, practical work of the 'Rest.'" She cheerfully complied.

When Dr. Burr was called to the pastorate of the Newton Centre Baptist church, coming from his work at Ruggles street, he looked out upon the fields and trees of this city. He thought, "O, if there was some place here where the weary mothers and children of Boston's tenements could come and rest." Ladies of his church and others became interested, and the work grew to be an established fact, no doubt with some failures and mistakes, until on the fourth day of May, 1903, twelve ladies of Newton Centre were incorporated by the State of Massachusetts in a body to be known as "The Mothers' Rest Association of Newton Centre," its purpose being the maintaining of a home where tired mothers with their children are invited to rest.

Taking experience as a teacher, it was found best there should be a system in collecting the guests, one lady having charge of each party, who come from churches and homes in Boston, and are carefully chosen for their known needs. Those on the day of my visit came from the Denison House of Boston, and two elderly ladies from Hope Chapel. These had a large room, from which they could not only see, but step out upon, the grass and under an over-spreading oak.

But I asked, "How do they all get along together? Coming as they do from different environments, is there not more or less friction?"

"The first week is usually a hard one for them. We have a few rules as possible, but we must have some, and even these few they find irksome at first. Then amongst the children petty jealousies appear. All is new. Then with several mothers and children in a room, as with our cramped quarters we are obliged to have them, we have some fault findings, but not more than in a neighborhood or boarding-house, where each mother's child is perfect. When our new home is built, which we trust will be soon, there will be a room for each mother and her child or children."

At the time of my visit everything was orderly and quiet. Besides the matron and assistant there is a helper, a cook, and a laundress. The cook is proficient in her department, as well-cooked food is an important factor in building up the worn-out mothers. Above all, she is a most excellent bread-maker; this is no small item in the bill of fare.

A room occupying part of the front of the house is the mothers' dining-room. Two long tables on either side are covered with white enamel cloth, and with plates, mugs, etc. The room has a neat and quiet look.

I inquired about the course of food. In the morning, cereal, oatmeal usually preferred, coffee, tea, milk, or chocolate, chops, rolls or gems. Dinner is roast meat, or fish in some form on Friday, potatoes and some other vegetable, a light dessert or fruit. For tea they have bread and sauce. Milk is the most expensive part of the living, as, besides the milkmeals, in the forenoon milk is given to weak mothers and little children. From the treasurer's report for last year we see that the expense for food was $750 for fourteen weeks, for forty persons each week.

I looked into the large light laundry, the small but neat store closets. Upstairs we found the rooms of good size, with usually three windows. These contained several beds and cribs of no particular style or color. All had white quilts and two fat pillows. The only work the mothers are required to do is to take care of their rooms; and, knowing the habits of many of them at home, one would note that all was in perfect order, not for show, as there is no special visiting day at the Mothers' Rest. Up the second flight the same order was to be noticed. Here were bathroom and nursery, the latter showing that it is a favorite place for the children. The sanitary conditions seemed such as they should be.

Religious services are held on every Sunday afternoon, in charge of some lady manager and conducted by neighboring pastors, who usually bring with them one or more singers. Singing forms an important part of all services, and the mothers and children join heartily in familiar hymns. The larger percentage of the guests are Americans and Protestants although they come from all nations and all creeds or no creed. To assist in the singing they have a piano from the Newton Centre Baptist church.

Each party stays two weeks, and then there is a lapse of a day in order to clean up for the next party.

This is the way I saw an illustrated sermon on the text, "Inasmuch as ye did unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." May the good work grow and prosper and a new and suitable home soon be theirs. Visitors are always welcomed, and gifts of books, magazines, toys, garments, clothing, vegetables, or fruit will be most gladly received—E. C. Wheeler, in "The Greeting."

Letter to Brackett & Co.,

Newtonville.

Dear Sir: The easiest business in this world is dry-goods; the reason is: your customers want your stuff as much as you want to sell it; they come in; you show it and sell it. That's the whole business, except your buying the goods.

Devoe comes next. It saves money, and people like money. They like somebody else's more than their own; they like to make it more than to save it; they like to keep it perhaps as well as to make it.

Buildings run down fast, without paint; poor paint is the same. Devote is the means of stopping that leak; a big one. All we've got to do to sell Devote, is to show that a man saves money by using it. E. D. Jewell, Corry, Pa., painted his house 5 years ago with mixed paint; 14 gallons. Last spring he painted Devote; 10 gallons. Saved $15 to $20.

Yours truly
F. W. Devote & Co.
P. S.—W. E. Tomlinson, West Newton, sells our paint.

Police Paragraphs.

Patrick J. Ford, aged 20, of 76 Allison street, Nonantum, until recently employed at a local garage, was in court Monday morning on a double charge of stealing a ride and operating an automobile without a license. He was fined $15 for each offense.

Crazed by liquor, William A. Kane of Newton, while a prisoner in station 2 in this city, nearly wrecked the place Sunday afternoon, and would have succeeded in escaping but for the strenuous efforts of the police.

Following his arrest he was placed in a cell, but had been there only a few minutes when he wrenched a heavy plank loose from his bed and, using it as battering ram, smashed everything breakable to pieces. Two windows, casings and all, together with the cell furniture, were reduced to small fragments. Heavy iron bars guarded the window, but Kane in some manner, worked the plank between them, and by prying succeeded in loosening them. He was discovered by an officer who after some difficulty succeeded in getting hold of the plank and wrenching it away from the man. Kane was then placed in another cell, but this he also dismantled. Finally the police placed him in irons. In court Monday Kane was fined $20 for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Our recent correspondent who complained of the neglect of street cleaning this summer can find the reason in the high tax rate just announced.
It is only by the strictest economy that Mayor Weed squeezed the rate to the eighteen dollar limit.

There are rumors of a contest for the republican nomination for Mayor.
The controlling powers have so frequently prevented a contest in the past that there is a growing disposition to upset the so-called machine.

Just think of the nameless creatures which have been feeding in Crystal Lake.

Here's a guess that the census will show about 40,000 in this city.

The Republican ticket looks like Guilford and Draper.

The tax rate has put everyone to a seep.

Crystal Lake is disinfected.

Newton is about deserted.

Pauper Burials.

Through a misunderstanding of mutual friends, the body of Mrs. Ann Flaherty, who died at the Newton Hospital last week Thursday was buried as a pauper in the city lot at the Newton Cemetery by Undertaker E. W. Pratt of Newton Centre. Mrs.
Flaherty had been employed as a domestic for many years by the family of C. W.
Lord of Park street, who are now at their summer home in Foxboro. They assumed that Mrs. Flaherty would be buried by her two friends, Miss Nellie McCarthy and Miss Kate Hanahan. These ladies thought that the Lord family would attend to the same matter. When it was learned that the body had been buried as a pauper, the ladies took steps to remove it to Calvary cemetery and Undertaker Flood was given the order. When the box containing the body was opened it was found to be partially filled with old newspapers and waste paper. Immediate notice was given Overseer of the Poor Fowle and Undertaker Pratt stated that the work had been done by his assistant, to whom he had given orders to prepare the body in the usual method, lining the box or casket with cloth. He was very much disturbed to find the condition of affairs.

Overseer Fowle stated that $15 was the amount paid for this work with the understanding that the body shall be properly interred in a pine coffin.

A change in the method of doing this work will probably be the result of the ex-posure.

Crystal Lake.

Following the very general complaints from residents of Newton Centre and Newton Highlands, regarding the disagreeable odors emanating from the waters and shores of Crystal Lake, the board of health has had an expert analysis made and today are engaged in applying the remedy.

The chemist found that the sample of water submitted contained large quantities of blue-green algae and many encysted nemas. As these were not sufficiently formidable to produce the "pig-pen" odor, the chemist made a personal visit to the lake and determined that the real cause was vast quantities of anabaena (notice the letter "a"). With the cause determined the remedy was easily found although it can hardly be said to be as easily applied. The lake is to receive a disinfecting bath of copper sulphate, and great care must be taken to use enough to kill the anabaena and not the fish. For if the fish are killed the result will be far worse than the disease.

In general terms there are estimated to be about 12,000,000 gallons of water in Crystal Lake. The pounds of copper sulphate are to be dissolved in the water, the process being to tie a bag of the disinfectant to the rear of a boat and row systematically all over the lake.

The board of health is engaged on this task today, and the result is awaited with great interest by the abutters on the lake.

Trolley Express.

In asking our board of aldermen for permission to act as a common carrier, the Boston and Worcester Street Railway Company emphasizes a condition of modern life, which is bound to become more and more insistent and spread wherever the trolley car is known.

It is simply the desire of the travelling public to have their parcels and packages carried on the same line as it uses itself, and not wait the slow movements of the "over the road," express, or the far distant freight car.

Some idea of what the Worcester company intends can be gleaned from what has been accomplished in this direction in Providence, R. I. That city, like Boston, is the centre of supply for all the towns and villages touched by the system, and for this reason the freight and express business of the R. I. Suburban and Providence and Fall River St. R. Co. consists chiefly in distributing general merchandise of all descriptions to the surrounding places and bringing in farm market and dairy products from the country to the city. The company does not deliver goods beyond its several stations, and does not therefore come in competition with the purely local expresses. It uses its passenger cars for its business and gives an hourly service in summer and an hourly service morning and evening and two hour service in the middle of the day in winter. Small fruit and berries are extensively grown in the territory served and two cars are used exclusively for this class of business. The charges range from 10 cents for five pounds, carried 25 miles, to 40 cents for 100 pounds carried the same distance, with special figures for distinct classes of matter.
The frequency and promptness of the service are all the inducement which has been found necessary to offer shippers although besides this the company does everything in its power to accommodate its customers. The company's telephone all along the line is freely offered to customers desiring to order goods in Providence and Fall River.

The system has been a great success in Providence and there is no reason why it should not be equally so in the territory surrounding Boston.

Coles-Barker Wedding.

In the Barnard Memorial Chapel on Warrenton street, Boston, of which her grandfather, the Rev. Charles F.
Barnard was the founder, Dr. Ruth Berker of West Newton was married at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon to her classmate at the Boston University Medical School, Dr. William W.
Coles, now an assistant physician on the staff of the Westboro Insane Hospital.

The Rev. B. F. McDaniel, pastor of the Barnard Memorial officiated at the ceremony. The bride was given away by her father, W. Eustis Barker, of 70 Elm street, West Newton. There were no attendants, and only the immediate family and intimate friends were present. Miss Eleanor Leonard sang "O Perfect Love." The bride wore a costume of white muslin, lace trimmed, with tulle veil, and rosebuds trimmed the veil and wedding gown.
The church was decorated with potted plants.

The bride graduated from the Newton High school in the class of 1900, and entered the medical department of Boston University, from which she was graduated in the class of 1904.
She then became a member of the staff at the Homeopathic Hospital in Boston.

While at the medical school she became acquainted with the young student who Wednesday became her husband. Both of them were earnest workers and the acquaintanceship which grew out of their association in the class room ripened into a romantic attachment.

Dr. Coles is the son of Dr. William Coles of Wakefield, a well known physician. The newly married couple left after the ceremony for a wedding trip at the close of which they will go to Westboro, where Dr. Coles will resume his duties at the hospital and where the bride will also become a member of the medical staff of the institution.

It pays the buyer to buy from an advertiser and to say he saw the article advertised in this or that paper. The man who mentions an advertisement when buying goods really gets the best possible service, even better than the regular customer when this is possible. Why? Simply because the advertiser pays good money for his advertisement and he is glad to hear from it. It is a compliment to his good business judgment.

The Maiden and the Beau Gallant

By LOUIS J. VANCE

Copyright, 1905, by S. S. McClure Co.

MR. RICHARD DORRANCE, meditatively rolling a cigarette, cast about him an approving glance.

"Perfect country," he drawled to nobody in particular, though Tom Darby was at hand to hear. "Orange sunshine on the yellow sands, magenta shadows, ultramarine sea, luxuriant foliage to beat all creation. This beats tossing around on board a yacht, anyway. Think I'll marry a native and settle down to dream out my days in peace."

He lit the cigarette and flopped over on his back, flourishing heavenward his lengthy and immaculately white duck clad legs. Tom Darby resented the resultant display of vivid hosiery and growled. Darby was in a resentful mood. He had been most comfy aboard Dorrance's private yacht, the Beau Gallant, and saw no earthly reason why he should have been dragged therefrom for a mile's row over the steaming shallows to the end that they might merely loaf on the edge of the beach. Moreover, he was thirsty.

"There's not a drink in sight," he said crossly, "nor a suggestion of a breeze. This is plainly the jumping off place. And we'll be caught in the device of a thunderstorm if I'm not mistaken."

"Disappointed, you mean?" "Besides," Darby went on defiantly, ignoring the correction, "who'd have you, I'd like to know?"

"That's immaterial. I'll find some one." He raised his voice and shouted: "Young gentleman, rich and of distinguished appearance, desires a wife. Object, matrimony. No triflers."

Darby grunted and resumed his disgusted contemplation of Dorrance's socks. He was about to make an unpleasant remark when both became aware of the presence of a third person.

How she ever got there so quietly Darby could never understand, but she stood before them trim and neat and most desirable in a chic muslin frock and a canary colored hat of some sort, with ribbons, perched atop her curly brown hair. Brown eyes she had, too, and the very devil of mischief lurking in their depths, and rosy lips with the shadow of mirth in their corners. Darby believes that her nose is tilted just the least bit, but he will never dare assert it. At any rate, she was entirely to be adored, with the sun filtering down through the leaves and dotting her with little blurs of light.

Dorrance was on his feet in an instant, and you may believe that Tom Darby was not far behind him. The two stood like idiots, gazing at her as if she had dropped from heaven. And she might have that, but the dancing eyes were against the theory.

She glanced from the one to the other, apparently enjoying the situation immensely. She fairly laughed when at last she said:

"Good evening, gentlemen."

Both stammered incoherent responses, and then the young lady calmly pointed at Dorrance with the tip of her dainty parasol.

"I'll marry you," said she. She might have been asking him to tea.

But Dorrance was ever more ready than Darby and lucky. It is but fair to state that Tom was staggered, but Dorrance:

"I was convinced of that when I laid eyes on you," he said, bowing.

"Just so," she laughed.

And then Darby found his tongue. "Perhaps you've overlooked me," he said timidly. "Dorrance is all very well, but I have my points." He stuck out his chest, louting low and with a flourish.

"They're well covered," said Dorrance nastily.

"Which you hereby respectfully submit to my consideration?" she asked. "Just so, but you're a trifle late, Mr. Dorrance. I think you said? Mr. Dorrance asked first."

Darby protested. "But he never imagined!"

"Oh, but I did," Dorrance interrupted unblushingly. "I've expected this right along."

"Of course he has," she added severely. "That was very ungalant of you." Darby collapsed; he had never learned to accept defeat gracefully.

"Just my luck," he moaned. "I never raised a little doe and learned to love its soft brown eye but what?"

"Oh, dry up," said Dorrance ungraciously enough. "Besides, you have it wrong."

Tom Darby sulked. The maiden eyed Dorrance somewhat approvingly. He returned her gaze with admiring interest, but she kept her countenance—only those eyes would dance divinely. Neither spoke till she extended a tiny hand with a firm pink palm.

"Come along," she said, "since we are to be married."

"Ever at your service." And he took the hand.

"Squire of dames?" Tom Darby snapped.

"But you are disagreeable," she said wonderingly.

"Don't mind him," Dorrance said soothingly; "we cannot justly blame him."

They moved off, hand in hand. Darby remained motionless in high dudgeon. The affair was so distinctly preposterous, and the girl was so distinctly pretty. He heard Dorrance laugh, and there was a familiar clank to his tone which warned Darby that his friend was ripe for any absurd adventure. Moreover, Darby confesses to the sin of curiosity. He relented sufficiently to permit a glance over his shoulder. They were quite a distance away, disappearing around a bend in the beach. He ran after them shouting. They turned and waited.

"Mayn't I come, too?" he pleaded humbly.

"If you'll be nice," she stipulated. "And he can be best man," said Dorrance tentatively.

"Come," cried Darby generously; "that's some consolation! But Dick, the Beau Gallant?"

"Rather the Beau," said Dorrance warmly. He looked out to sea. The yacht was beating steadily up against the breeze. "Hendricks can take care of her all right. 'Tisn't every day a fellow gets married."

"No, indeed," Tom Darby assented heartily and followed them. At least he could see Dorrance through even should he fail to keep him from egregious folly. And he himself was falling into the mad humor of the proceeding.

"Ruth," Dorrance began over his shoulder.

"Who?"

"My fiancée, sir."

"Oh."

"Introduce me," she said demurely.

"Ruth, this is my chum, Mr. Tom Darby."

"Thomas Edgerton Darby."

"Tom, my promised bride, Miss Ruth Wharton."

Again Darby bowed, this time over a pink and white confection of a hand.

"I'll marry you."

Decidedly, if Dick did—which of course was monstrous—if he actually should win her, he was open to congratulation. "Ruth," said Dorrance, "is taking us to her ancestral home. We are to meet her paternal uncle, Mr. Henry Wharton, this evening. At present he is not at home."

"Naturally she wants her family to inspect her choice. I promise to make no revelations as to your character; I'll maintain a most discreet silence."

"And damming silence. I prefer that you talk."

"It is not far now," said Ruth.

"The walk has made me thirsty," Darby complained.

"It has then accomplished the inevitable," Dorrance remarked loftily.

They had struck inland from the beach, passing through a sparse belt of pines, and now emerged upon a narrow strip of sandy road. Opposite them was a hickory stone wall surmounted by broken glass and boasting a rickety, rusty gate of iron. The three plowed across to this and entered fairly spacious and well kept grounds. Magnolias and shrubbery grew here and there, and the orange trees were in blossom. There were prim little beds of old fashioned flowers; also a cast iron stag, severely weather beaten. The thicket of water from a hidden fountain was very grateful to Tom Darby's ears. At the end of a glade he caught glimpses of white Corinthian columns, evidently the facade of a mansion. Darby's misgivings vanished under the influence of this peaceful scene. If Ruth were heir to such a stately property, then Dorrance—oh, Dorrance was plainly favored of the gods!

Meanwhile this remarkable young lady was setting a pace that was quite uncomfortable for Darby, who was and is plump, let us say, and firmly opposed to exertion at any time, so that he fell somewhat in the rear and thought it mightily discourteous that the two should converse in tones so low that he was able to hear never a word. Nevertheless he persevered, though with much puffing, and was presently rewarded with an easy chair upon a broad, coolly shaded veranda and left there, Dorrance and his precious Ruth entering the house, engaged in the most earnest of conversations. Darby felt horribly neglected and out of drawing till, to his huge delight, an aged negro appeared with a tray and glasses. He forgot his sorrows in the rattle of cracked ice.

From the open window came the murmur of voices, a steady monotone suggestive of anything but love's sweet silence. What on earth did it all mean anyway? Darby's glass was empty; he contemplated it mournfully and slowly stirred himself to refill it. He realized that he was very hungry.

Dorrance came out abruptly and seated himself on the railing of the veranda. Darby ignored him; he was offended to the last degree. Finally, however, "Try a julep, Dick," he said; "they're excellent."

"You were ever a carnal creature, Tom."

Darby looked up sharply. Dorrance's voice was strange. He found him smiling rather grimly, an odd, truculent expression which was at variance with his usual placid contentment.

"Hello!" Darby was alarmed. "What's up?"

"Got nerves, Tom?"

"Not a nerve. All lost in adipose tissue." He promptly belled himself by his discomposure and repeated anxiously, "What's up?"

"I want your assistance. It's just this, old fellow, the uncle of this angel."

"Meaning your betrothed?" Darby grinned in hollow fashion.

"Just the same and seriously."

Darby experienced a flash of comprehension; this might explain why Dorrance was so momentarily solemn.

"Man, you don't actually intend to commit matrimony?"

"But I do, and I may before morning."

"Lord!" said Darby helplessly.

"No joking matter, Tom. This uncle, Henry Wharton, as near as I can make out, is a thorough paced scoundrel."

"The villain of this dramma? G'wan!"

"Listen to me, you infernal idiot! Ruth—"

Darby wagged his head hopelessly. Dorrance fixed him with a stern glare. "Ruth," he repeated with determination, "is heiress to a peck of property—this and more. She's an orphan, and old Wharton is her guardian. She comes into possession when she's eighteen, and she will be that tomorrow."

"A woman's age?"

"Be quiet. If she marries before that, nine-tenths of her inheritance reverts to her guardian."

Here Darby grew befuddled.

"Then why in heaven's name does she want you?"

"I don't know that she does except as an alternative. This amiable uncle is added about money; wants to get her married, even tried to force her into a match with a—oh, a real devilish sort of fellow, Fetter by name. Now, Fetter won't do, according to Ruth. She doesn't want him, or anybody, for that matter."

"Not even me?"

"Not even you?"

"How do you know?" she queried archly from the doorway, and Darby is positive that a prettier picture never was than she made framed in its rich, somber darkness. "Are we not engaged?"

"I hope so!" Dorrance cried fervently. "I'll have you if you'll let me, though all the world!"

"Oh, here," Darby exclaimed hastily, "I'm a modest man! Go on with the plot. I begin to see a light."

"Well, then," Ruth took up the thread of narrative, "as a last resort he persuaded me to come down here from Atlanta, knowing that I could never escape. And I never thought. It's twenty miles to the nearest village, eighteen to the nearest railroad. I could not walk it if I tried, and Cassius keeps close watch on me. The horses uncle took with him when he left this morning, saying that he would return this evening. I am positive that he means to bring back with him this odious Mr. Fetter and a clergyman."

"Two and two," said Darby.

"And—and I know you thought me a bold creature this afternoon, but I was desperate, helpless. I could not think what to do. You will help me, dear Mr. Darby, won't you?" And, believe me, she plumped down on her knees before him.

Darby was so embarrassed that he jumped as though she had kissed him. He adopted a paternal tone, speaking with the matured judgment of twenty-five years.

"Why, of course, my dear, you may rely on me." He was in a blue conceit with himself for that speech.

"Oh, thank you."

"Not at all! Not at all!" Darby marvels that he restrained himself from saying, "Tut, tut, my dear!" He added, with a relieving inspiration, "Then the best thing we can do is to get right aboard the Beau Gallant."

"Not in a thousand years," said Dorrance firmly.

"Why?"

Dorrance eyed him curiously. "I've a better plan," he said at length.

"What?"

"I'll tell you later. For the present you stay here. I'm going to trot down to the beach and signal Hendricks. We dine aboard tonight, you and I."

"That's a mercy. At what time?"

But Dorrance was gone.

"He is just splendid, isn't he?" said Ruth.

"Dorrance? Oh, yes, he's all right. If you marry him?"

"I've promised." She hung her head in such sweet confusion that Tom Darby was more than ever envious.

"But he will not hold you to that promise."

"Indeed," she flamed defiantly, "he has the right!"

"I wish I had," said Darby. "He's a lucky dog."

Here he suddenly executed a backward leap of some several feet. Ruth had whipped out from beneath her skirts a small revolver. To Tom Darby its size approximated that of a cannon.

"Great Scott!" he cried. "You can have him. I'm not thinking of interfering. Don't!"

For a moment her surprise was only equalled by his own. Then she began to laugh convulsively.

"Take it," she gasped. "It's for you."

Darby was suspicious. "What for?" he inquired.

"You might need it—shouldn't you—Henry come. He—he would be angry."

Darby approached and took the weapon gingerly.

"Is it loaded?" he asked, with trepidation.

"Of course."

"Very well, then," in resignation. He deposited it softly upon a table, convinced that at any second he might become an involuntary suicide, and retired to a distance. Ruth del into the hallway. Darby eyed the revolver askance and swore softly, sighed and lit a cigarette.

Twilight was falling, and from behind him came stifled mirth.

Come 10 o'clock on a cool, starlit night, and the Beau Gallant was speeding westward under a full moon of steam. To the north loomed the dim, low coast of Alabama.

In the saloon was assembled a motley party to a champagne supper, of which Dorrance and Tom Darby formed the only self satisfied members, the others being plunged in deepest gloom despite all attempts to enliven them.

First, Henry Wharton, aged in years and sin, if his countenance be allowed as evidence, glowering evilly across the table at Darby, whom he had mistakenly conceived to be the moving spirit of the enterprise; then Mr. Fetter, young and weak willed, lacking excuse for his existence, but mightily impressed with his own simulation of rakish worldliness; lastly, a pale, frightened person, a clergyman by his cloth, but deep in the clutch of a raging thirst for strong drink—these were the unwilling guests.

Mr. Wharton addressed himself to Tom Darby, who was contentedly engaging the breast of a tender chicken. Mr. Wharton shook a lean fist framed in soiled linen at him.

"I'll have the law on you!" he cried, quivering with rage. "You'll find, young man, that this is not a country where you can kidnap—yes, kidnap—peaceful citizens at your will and not suffer for it."

"I wish," said Darby calmly, "that you wouldn't wear your cuffs more than a week at a time. You spoil my appetite."

Mr. Wharton fumed, speechless. Fetter laughed.

"He's right there, pop," he said irreverently. "But don't you think you are a little lawless?" he added to Darby.

"Not at all," Dorrance interposed, smiling indulgently. "The parson will be witness that you came willingly."

The parson raised expostulating hands. "At the pistol's point," he protested very truthfully.

"I merely invited you to a stag on my wedding eve, and you came with alacrity, though I did understand that you had a pressing engagement."

The parson smiled faintly. Mr. Wharton attempted to control himself. "I'll tell you what," he said, speaking slowly and thickly. "If you'll take us back immediately I'll give you $1,000."

Dorrance laughed and shook his head.

"Fifteen hundred?"

"You ante too low," Tom Darby suggested.

"Three thousand," he snarled.

"On, make it worth while and I'll raise you, pop," cried Fetter.

"Five?"

"No," said Dorrance.

"Ten, then. I'll give you ten?"

Mr. Wharton's hands were trembling violently. Dorrance politely filled his glass for him. He tossed it off eagerly.

"Twenty?" he pleaded.

"Who-ew?" Darby whistled. "I had no idea the stakes were so high."

Mr. Wharton hesitated; every moment was now of consequence. He stuttered painfully.

"Fifty-fifty thousand," he managed to say.

Dorrance rose and looked at his watch. "You have no security to offer but your word," he said wearily, "and that is worthless."

Mr. Wharton's jaw moved loosely, but no sounds came.

"Moreover," Dorrance continued, "I don't need your money, nor do I want it."

"I'll have the law on you," Wharton repeated sullenly. Hope was dead in his breast.

"I wouldn't if I were you. And you will not. This is rather a noxious business which you've attempted—and failed at. Your credit would suffer were it known. So you will say nothing. I'm happy to inform you that you're too late. It is 11 o'clock, and your word will be her own mistress in one hour."

Dorrance walked to the door and gave an order. The engines began to chug more slowly, and the Beau Gallant came almost to a standstill. Mr. Wharton sputtered threats and obscenities.

"I believe you were right," said Dorrance to him. "We do not desire your company after all. Come on deck. I'll put you ashore now."

The four followed him.

"That is Mobile," he said, indicating a haze of light on the northern horizon. "There is a landing here and a fair road. By hard walking you should reach it in the early morning. Thence you can get home by noon if you're lucky. But by that time Ruth and I will be married."

"So that's your game," Fetter sneered. "I thought you didn't care for the money."

"My dear sir," said Dorrance, unmoved, "when you have associated with decent people for any length of time—if you ever do—your thoughts may be of some consequence. At present your opinion is of absolutely no moment."

"The boat is ready, sir," a man reported.

"And now, gentlemen, I thank you for the pleasure which your company has afforded me. Oh, not a word, sir—to Mr. Wharton—the obligation is entirely on my side. Good evening." He was bowing them over the side when a thought struck him. "Oh, parson, I quite forgot! We may need your services. Do not go."

So the parson stayed, most willingly. It seemed to Darby. And the Beau Gallant turned tail on the lights of Mobile, picked up her boat and steamed swiftly back over her course.

The dawn found the yacht swinging lazily at anchor. Mr. Dorrance came on deck, refreshed by a bath and a breakfast, yet with a carking doubt for a background to his thoughts. He received an immediate impression that all nature was chuckling in huge enjoyment of his predicament.

He leaned upon the rail, scowled and lit a cigar, hurling complicated oaths down at the careless sea.

Here an hour later the slothful Darby found him.

"Well," cried Darby genially, "for an expectant bridegroom!"

Dorrance favored him with a heavy glare.

"Bridegroom," he said slowly, "be eternally!"

"What! Why, but yesterday?"

"Was yesterday. Today is another matter. I'm in the devil of a fix."

"The lady hasn't sent word refusing you?"

"No; that's just the trouble."

Darby grinned blandly at the unvarse.

"Romance," he propounded, "is the salt of life and its savor. Without it—"

"One escapes the holy bonds of matrimony. Tom, without exception you are the most unmitigated—" He broke off. "I'm going ashore and have over with it. Come along."

"I'll stand around oblivious at no lover's tryst. You shall go alone."

And to this he stuck, so that the rest is only hearsay, but strongly supported by circumstantial evidence.

She was seated by the splashing fountain when he met her. She did not hear his footsteps, but sat idly dabbling her hand in the water, lost in reverie. A school of little goldfish gnawing for rations swarmed to her finger tips.

"Oh!" she cried, with a rueful smile, seeing him before her.

"I've returned," he said awkwardly and lost the power of coherent thought.

"I see you have." She laughed confusedly and rose. "You—you had no trouble—were in no danger?"

"Not in the least. I—" The unavoidable grew startlingly imminent. "You have been safe, I trust?"

"Thanks to your kindness—yes." A pause; then, "I—I don't know how to thank you, Mr. Dorrance."

"Mr. Dorrance," he repeated foolishly. He rushed desperately in where both had feared to tread. "There is the way!"

"I—I—of course, I—" Her tone was haughty as a princess.

"But I didn't mean"—he floundered. "You made your meaning plain, sir?"

"Since you feel that way about it"—He turned to go.

"Oh, one moment. I—I do not wish that you should think me ungrateful. Indeed, I am not. You have done me a great service, and—"

"And the reward?"

"But I scarcely know you."

"I haven't claimed it."

"I am sensible that I gave my word."

"But your heart?"

She sighed. "My heart remains mine."

"I knew that."

"To bestow—oh?"

She had been toying with her ring, a tiny affair studded with a single stone. It had slipped from her fingers and splashed in the fountain. Dorrance was instant to plunge his arm in to the el-

At the Theatres

Coming Attractions

Grand Opera House—The dramatic field is always open for novelties; in fact it is essential to keep up the interest of the stage. The most noteworthy production of the new season in this respect, is said to be the mammoth scenic drama "Fighting Fate," which comes to the Boston Grand Opera House next week. There has been no limit to the praise of the critics. The story of the play is one of intense interest, and while dealing with the sordid facts of race track life, is told, in a new way, a pretty, appealing love story runs throughout the stronger scenes of intrigue and adventure, while typical race track metics, comedian and whistler, and the Laroses, slack wire experts. A most regrettable announcement in regard to the entertainment for the week of Aug. 21 is that which conveys the intelligence of the closing week of the Fadettes woman's orchestra. Their program will be made up entirely of request numbers, taken from the most popular selections which they have played this season, and there is no question of doubt but what the theatre will be crowded with their friends as already there is a big demand for box and reserved seats. The kinetograph will show the usual entire new list of motion pictures.

Tremont Theatre—George Ade's successful comedy, "The College Widow," will come to the Tremont Theatre on Saturday evening, August 19, bringing with it a string of the clever people who helped it to a run of thirty-eight weeks in New York last season. Of the following the

that the crowds going to Norumbega Park this summer are so much larger than those of any previous season. It was thought that the high water mark in this respect was reached last season but the many improvements which have been made at this picturesque resort on the Charles each season has brought it to a state of perfection that is duplicated in very few instances in this country and the attractions are not only irresistible as far as the regular patrons of previous seasons are concerned but there are thousands more who are taking the delightful trolley trip out there to enjoy the garden, woodland and river scenery and the many amusements and entertainments in the park, who have never been there before.

With the best canoe equipment on the Charles the Norumbega boat house, the great diversity of amusements in the mysterious chalet, the rare and numerous animal sights in the zoological garden, a restaurant with orchestra and ideal cuisine, band characters furnish unlimited comedy. A very novel scene is introduced in the second act. The wireless telegraph station at Fort Hamilton is seen and a message sent by the operator out to a revenue cutter. This is the first time that this new invention has been used so thoroughly on the stage and it arouses intense interest. A view of the beautiful Grand Circle with Central Park, Subway Stations, Columbus Monument and the brilliantly lighted cafes and theatres of this section of New York, all seen through a whirling snowstorm, is said to be one of the most magnificent effects staged. The race track and grand stand at Sheepshead Bay are also pictured during a big race. Little Anne Blanche, one of the smallest and most versatile women on the stage will appear in the dual role of Larry and Grace. Her quick transitions from one to the other are said to be surprising. A big company of representative players has been selected for Miss Blanche's support. Many characteristic types of the race track world are promised, while a sextette of musical stable boys will try to outdo the original sextette of musical comedy fame. Matinees will be given as usual on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday when special prices prevail.

Keith's Theatre—Robert Hilliard who is credited with being the best "legitimate" player who has ever appeared in vaudeville, as well as the best drawing card from the box office point of view, will be the leading entertainer of a capital program at Keith's the week of Aug. 21. Mr. Hilliard announces this week as his farewell tour of vaudeville and he will be seen in an entirely new dramatic playlet "As a Man Sows" assisted by a competent company of five actors. The surrounding show is one of the strongest the management has offered this season including the Juggling McBanus, two of the greatest club jugglers in the varieties, Gallagher and Barrett in a funny vaudeville travesty; John D. Gilbert, "comedian at large," in songs and stories; Herbert Brooks, a skilful card manipulator, with the greatest trunk trick ever invented, Rice and Cady, German dialect comedians; Mooney and Holbein in grotesque singing and dancing specialties; Alf Holt, mi-greater number were in the first cast: Thomas Meighan, George Bryant, Edwin Holt, Dan Collyer, Frederick Burton, Stephen Maley, J. Beresford Hollis, Edgar Davenport, Morgan Coman, Thomas Wilson, Frank Brownlee, Robert Kelly, Frances Ring, Ivy Troutman, Gertrude Quinlan and Louise Hollister Forde. The company is being rehearsed in New York for the Boston engagement by George Marion who staged it, and to whom Mr. Savage is indebted for one of the most talked of scenes of the past season—that of the third act in which the Atwater football team, led by Billy Bolton, the star half-back is victorious over the team from Bingham. An army, of extra people is employed to give this picture the necessary motion and color. Conspicuous in the cast are to Boston girls, Miss Ring and Miss Quinlan. The former plays the title role and the latter the part of "a prominent waitress"—a typical Ade creation. The character parts are the essential ones, and these are retained largely by their creators. There is the football trainer who used to be a fighter, played by Dan Collyer; the freshman from Squantumville and his father who represents the town and district in the State Senate, played by Mr. Burton and Mr. Maley; the college comedian who owes a board bill to Flora Wiggins' "mammar," and who is energetically pursued by Flora throughout the play; Morgan Coman being the student; the town marshal (Mr. Brownlee) newly chosen and moved to suppress college pranks; the western railroad president Mr. Holt, who has a Baptist college on his hands; the football recruit from a foundry who comes to Atwater to study art—Mr. Wilson. "The College Widow" will open the regular season at the Tremont, and with the engagement Wednesday matinees will be resumed.

Norumbega Park

Norumbega Park had a record breaking attendance last Sunday for this season as far as the daily and statistics of total attendance are concerned. In fact the number of people who passed the turnstiles have been exceeded by only one holiday this summer. It is a source of gratification, but at the same time of surprise concerts all day, the merry-go-round, the electric fountain, the casino with its cooling drinks and light refreshments and plaza outlook over the festive canoeing on the river, and many other amusements, not forgetting the most important of all, the covered open air theatre, Norumbega Park has something to suit each individual taste of the amusement seeker. This week in the theatre an excellent vaudeville program is being presented and next week the musical comedy, "The Gibson Girl," will be presented by an excellent company of comedians and a large chorus of pretty girls. "The Gibson Girl" is founded on a succession of complications resulting from the principal character bringing home a second wife after being absent for fifteen years without telling his grown-up daughter of the new alliance.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Founded 1853 Term opens September 14

Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Director.

There are privileges and advantages connected with the student life at the New England Conservatory of Music that mark it an institution of unusual efficiency. The remarkable equipment and strong organization for musical education have resulted from a growth of more than fifty years. The material increase is significant, but of greater importance is the experience that has come with these fifty years of progress. To-day, no school in America can contribute as much and none in Europe offer more toward a musical education than the New England Conservatory of Music.

Owing to the practical training of students in our Normal Department graduates are eagerly sought as teachers. Practical Pianoforte Tuning course in one year.

Detailed descriptions of Courses are best told about in the year book which will be sent on request. Address

Monday Morning, Aug. 21, Begins the Second Week of the Great Remnant and Auction SALE!

All this week our store has been crowded with customers who have taken advantage of this opportunity to get up-to-date staple goods for about one half the regular prices.

"SEVERAL CASES OF GOODS"

purchased for the opening sale did not arrive until now and will go on sale

MONDAY MORNING, AUGUST 21st,

so that we are in position to offer equally as good bargains next week as we have been giving this week. We hold the

"Great R. and A. Sales"

only twice each year because it takes so much time and labor to prepare for same that cannot give us but two sales each year. The first week of the sale has resulted in making many broken lots and odd sizes that must be closed out and this means that the

"The R. and A. Syndicate"

R. and A. Prices

will be still further reduced and the bargains bigger and better than ever before.

"FOR ONE WEEK ONLY"

Monday, August 21 to Saturday, August 26,

we will give

"2 for 1 Double Legal Stamps"

on all purchases in every department. We will pay 20c per hundred for any quantity of Legal Stamps and we will pay $2.00 cash or $2.50 in goods for each full book of Legal Stamps.

Remember the Great R. and A. Sale will end at 10 o'clock P. M. Saturday, August 26th. This will give one more week to secure the greatest bargains ever offered anywhere in this vicinity.

36,694

Census for 1905 is Announced.

A Comparatively Small Gain Over 1900.

The Census bureau on Wednesday gave out the following figures as the population of Newton by the census of May first of the current year: The total of 36,694 is quite a disappointment to those who have given some attention to the matter, as 40,000 was surely expected. The gain is but 3107 over the national census of 1900, or about 9 per cent and 9104 more than the state census of 1895, a gain of 33 per cent. The males number 16,114 as against 12,355 in 1895 and 15,034 in 1900. There are 20,580 females as compared with 15,235 in 1895 and 18,553 in 1900. The greatest gain is in Ward 3, where there are 2426 more persons than ten years ago. Ward 5 follows closely with a gain of 2223.
Ward 1 with a gain of but 599 brings up the rear.

Ward 5 has the largest population, jumping from 4th place in 1895 to second in 1900 and then displacing Ward 2 the present year. The enlargement of the manufacturing plants at the Upper Falls and the attractions of Waban and Newton Highlands for places of residence are undoubtedly the reasons for the increase. A curious coincidence is the repetition of the figures of Ward 5 in 1895, with those announced as the figures for Ward 4 in 1905.

For purposes of comparisons the figures for 1900 and 1895 are also given:

	1905	1900	1895
Ward 1	4736	4597	4287
2	6215	5719	5412
3	5639	5481	4353

5	8537	5861	4114

SUMMER CORRESPONDENCE

With Scenery and Some Natural History Notes.

Away from Newton, Mass., at North Woodstock, N. H., July 12th to August 9th. I am glad to tell enough of the latter delightful place to show my neighbors and fellow citizens generally, that they can make no mistake in putting it on their memoranda of future outings as a place well worth visiting.

Sending trunks to the North Union station on the afternoon of July 11th and, leaving the home well cared for at a little before 9 a. m., of the 12th, and provided with a mileage ticket, we came in the 10 a. m. Canadian Pacific Express, via Lowell and Nashua, Manchester and Concord to Plymouth, N. H., where we changed cars for the branch to North Woodstock, which we reached about 3 o'clock P. M., a little late owing to delay of the heavy express below Plymouth.

Except for the excessive heat, and a long multiplicity of previous cares, and a few unexpected or untimely last things, the ride from always lovely Lake Winnepesaukee was not only comfortable but enjoyable; often through woods, and by ponds or streams and across thriving intervals.

North Woodstock itself is a neat and thriving rural village, with a principal main street and cross streets lined with pretty dwellings, and, near the centre, furnished with a variety of stores affording all that the summer visitor needs, from ruckings, lawn, and ribbons to maple sugar, souvenir cards and three daily mails.

The public spirited Improvement Association has aided in the equipment of the village with the highly prized conveniences of concrete sidewalks, street lights, shade trees and excellent water, with numerous street hydrants, from a reservoir on a large brook far up and away on a wooded hillside, where "Bell's Cascade" and the wonderful "Balanced Rock" in a romantic gorge are visited with delight by many.

If a first visitor to a place new to him, may drop a friendly hint, it would be that the many others who have learned to love the increasingly popular village would second the efforts of the Association named, by such unobtrusive contributions as would enable it to clear up the forest and leaves bordering the reservoir, so that its water would not be discolored by leaves as it is slightly, but probably not injuriously, for a few days after heavy rains. It is here due to these nature loving visitors to tell how cheerfully they cooperated, both as contributors and buyers of various useful and pretty handmade articles, with the home residents in promoting summer fairs held by the local farmer's grange, and the notably pretty and well served local church; where all were kindly made to feel at home, and were ably and winsomely taught that "One is your Master and all ye are brethren;" that one alone, with God on his side is a majority, though the world were against him; and that all do well to beware of putting relatively belittling outward form before lifelong upbuilding of vital substance of character.

But when, O writer, some reader may be impatiently saying, are your promised notes on scenery and natural history going to begin?

Right here, I immediately answer. Staying—not "stopping"—for I stopped the moment the handsome mountain wagon reached the door—at the home-like "Russell House" just at the north end of the village, we were at the centre of an encircling amphitheatre of hills; not too close to shut out light and air, but far enough away to give beautiful views in every direction of hills and mountains, from Loon Mt. in front twenty-four hundred feet high to Mt. Moosilauke 4800 ft. behind us west and many others all around.

Agassiz Basin is a wild rocky gorge in woods, with tumbling cascades, and large pot-holes.

Mountainside, a hillside farm reached through woods, at a height of 1100 ft. gives a valley view of the East Branch of Pemigewasset River, and a spot where to day-dream of winter camping by a well assorted company able to take care of, and entertain themselves.

Parker's Ledge, visited twice, a rocky height of 1000 ft. affords charming view of the Pemigewasset valley and the Flume in the distance.

With these as a few specimens out of many, we turn to lesser things. Fond of growing things as memorials of happy outings, I have, on my little more than half-acre lot, tall maples and larch from "Memphremagog's" wooded shore, about 1876, pines, white and red, fir balsam and mountain ash from various points, from Keene to Keasarge in New Hampshire at various times; and now I brought home, and set out the same day, small fir-balsams, hemlocks and and thirteen "Grape Ferns" (Botrychium Lunarioides), an interesting and curious growth, also called Moon-wort, abundant in the meadow to the right of the road to Agassiz Basin and not far from the post office. Also a handful of the larva cases of the Caddice-Fly, found on the margin of the Pemigewasset River near the Russell House. (See Lippincott's Library Ed. of Chambers' Cyclopaedia Vol. 11, p. 613, well illustrated.)

Since returning, these curious larva cases, protected and reinforced by minute fragments of wood or sand glued on to a softer lining, have already given much pleasure to two ladies who had heard of them, but had never before seen them.

But in returning to dense suburban civilization, I found a comical example of what such civilization could do to mislead the gray squirrels that had long been familiar objects skipping about on my own and neighbors' lawns, up and down the trees, and sometimes fiercely pecked by robins having nests in some of the trees. On loosening a wide awning that shades my wide piazza roof and library south window to let it unroll down its inclined frame, what was my astonishment to see a large part of the awning dropping to the roof in a shower of crumbs of the size of a dollar, more or less. There was a puzzle. Nothing of the sort happened before in the twelve years or more since the awning was made. Did rats do it? No, for in the thirty-three years I have owned my house I never saw a rat but once, and that was not in the house. We all watched until we saw the little nimble gray rogues jump from near by long twigs of an overhanging elm upon the awning frame and thence easily running up the frame to gnaw the awning, perhaps for nest linings, snugly rolled up as it was under the wide overhanging eaves of the house roof. Moral: Keep them from temptation by heading in the long elm shoots till the squirrels cannot jump from them to the awning frame, and so teach them to learn as we must, to "use the world without abusing it."

Literary Notes.

"Ancient Middlesex" is the title chosen by the Hon. Levi S. Gould, chairman of the Middlesex County Commission, for his recently published book printed under authority of Chapter 238, of the Acts of 1904.

Mr. Gould has made a most interesting account of the history of this famous old county and the book clearly shows that great care and a large amount of the most painstaking labor has been given to it.

Besides the valuable statistics, there are sketches of about all the early settlers, interesting descriptions of the old quaint customs and portraits and fac simile signatures of many worthy and ancient citizens.

Mr. Gould claims that Middlesex County is the birthplace of many noted men and inventions, among the former being Samuel F. B. Morse of telegraph fame, Oliver Wendell Holmes the poet, and Whistler the artist. In the latter he places Elias Howe who invented the sewing machine at Lowell, Charles Goodyear, the rubber expert at Woburn and Alva Clark the astronomer at East Chelmsford.

The county officers are given in full, many with portraits and about all with a biography. Among the Newton men, we note Seth Davis of West Newton who was County Commissioner 1841-44 and Edward J. Collins, the former city treasurer, who was a County Commissioner from 1860 to 1872. The late John B. Goodrich was District Attorney in 1872-74 and Mr. Edwin O. Childs who has served as Register of Deeds since 1897.

A reproduction of the seals used by the various cities and towns in the County and brief sketch of each is not the least valuable part of the work.

Mr. Gould is certainly entitled to the thanks of the County for collecting and arranging such important and interesting facts for easy reference.

River Accident.

James Sherman and Frank Dunstan two actors now at Norumbega Park, were rescued from the Charles Sunday afternoon by Patrolman Doyle of the park police.

Doyle was in a boat some distance away when he saw their canoe upset. He made all speed to the spot, but while getting Sherman into his boat, Dunstan, who could not swim, sank. Without hesitation Doyle, uniform and all, jumped overboard and diving succeeded in bringing Dunstan to the surface.

With great difficulty he reached his boat and got the unconscious man into it. Both were taken to the park police station near Weston bridge and later were able to leave for their boarding place in Auburndale.

It pays the buyer to buy from an advertiser and to say he saw the article advertised in this or that paper. The man who mentions an advertisement when buying goods really gets the best possible service, even better than the regular customer when this is possible. Why? Simply because the advertiser pays good money for his advertisement and he is glad to hear from it. It is a compliment to his good business judgment.

G. A. R. Selects New York Central Lines as "Official Route" to Denver.

To Leave Boston, Wed., Aug. 30.

The late Gen. Blackmar before his decease, had already given consideration to the train service, and other accommodations for the veterans on their trip to Denver, and had selected the New York Central lines as the official route to Denver, and the present Commander-in-Chief, General King, has confirmed this arrangement.

The route will be, Boston and Albany and New York Central to Buffalo, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern to Chicago or Big Four Route to St. Louis, thence Burlington Route to Denver.

The Executive Committee have arranged for the "official train" to leave Boston 10.45 A. M., Wednesday, August 30th. This train is due Chicago 11.59 A. M., Thursday, August 31st, leaving Chicago 5.00 P. M., same day is due Denver 7.50 P. M., Friday, Sept. 1st.

This gives the veterans a day longer at home, and consumes only two nights on the road.

The Woman's Relief Corps have been invited to join the Official Headquarters train which gets them into Denver in ample time for the Exercises at Cheyenne on Saturday.

Low rate excursion tickets are on sale at principal offices, and all interested should call on or address New York Central Lines, City Offices and Information Bureaus at 366 Washington St., Boston, 385 Main St., Worcester, and 404 Main St., Springfield, Mass.

Civil Service Course.

At eight o'clock Monday evening, August 28, the Prospect Union of 744 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, will hold the preliminary meeting of its special three months' civil service course. The "post office course" is one of the most popular and practical features of this social and educational club for workingmen. Every year it helps men of but little money and some ambition to gain appointments as post office clerks and letter carriers.

Positions in Uncle Sam's post office are very attractive to workingmen; a letter carrier's salary is $1000 a year, while a clerk earns from $600 to $1400. Every summer clerk and carriers alike have a vacation of 15 days without loss of pay. They hold office for life, there are no strikes or dull seasons to throw them out of work.

Every Fall, beginning about the middle of November examinations are held in Boston by the United States Civil Service Commission to select a list of men for appointment during the next year, in the Boston postal district, which includes this city. The examinations are tests in letter-writing, penmanship, arithmetic, geography, spelling and reading addresses. Those who receive 70 per cent or over are placed upon the list of "eligibles," from which all appointments must be made. Those who receive 85 per cent or better are practically certain of appointments. Making such grades is within the reach of any man of average intelligence and common school education, who has a little energy and the right preparation.

To give men the right preparation, the Prospect Union offers its "post office course." The instruction is carried on by four bright young Boston lawyers, who have had experience in teaching under the direction of President A. A. Ballantine of the Union. The work is carefully planned and systematized, in the light of several years experience. As a convenience to members of the course, the necessary papers are certified and physical examinations held at the Union.

In past years the limit of the course 125, has been reached, and some applications for membership have had to be refused. The showing of the students in the examinations has been very satisfactory and numbers of them have secured appointments.

Letter to Fanning Printing Co., Newton Upper Falls.

Dear Sirs: Two years ago the estate of the late Congressman Scott, of Erie, Pa., painted 24 Rolling Mill houses one coat Devco at a saving of 11 per cent for paint (lead-and-oil was after the job.)

That's how the tale reads. We infer what really happened. The buyer, as usual went by the cost of paint; got bids. Lead-and-oil bid low and guessed the quantity low; the saving was only 11 per cent. Nobody seems to have thought of this: the painting costs two or three times as much as the paint. How much did we save on the painting? Don't know.

The tale ends with this: We often refer inquirers to those houses, for wear of Devco. That's a good-enough story; but nobody knows what it is. Our only difficulty is want of paint-intelligence.

Yours truly
F. W. Devco & Co.

Nonantum Vacation School.

The eighteenth season of the Nonantum Vacation School opened with unusual gratification to the members of the Social Science Club as they had succeeded in placing this school under the auspices of the School Committee of Newton.

For many years, with untiring effort, the work has been carried on by the members of the club. Eighteen years ago they established a sewing class at Nonantum where they willingly gave their services as instructors in the work. Later they were able to form classes in cooking and woodwork with paid instructors.

From season to season other features have been introduced, until at the present time, the school contains eight departments with a corps of efficient instructors.

As the work has grown, the need of greater facilities has been felt in all departments. This want has been amply filled under the control of the School Board. With a more generous appropriation the teaching staff has been made stronger, and the work has not been hampered by lack of material.

On Monday, July 10, 1905, the school opened with an enrolment of 313 children, their ages ranging from three to fifteen years. These were divided into six classes each being allowed, as far as possible to decide in which class he would work. Under the guidance of the supervisor and thirteen teachers they received instruction in woodwork, basketry, including reed work, raphia and chair seating, cooking, sewing and millinery. For the younger children there were primary and kindergarten departments.

The work this summer has been similar to that done in previous years. Games, under the direction of a teacher of physical culture, with an assistant, have been thoroughly enjoyed by all. In the yard, each class has had daily physical exercise in basket ball, relay races, etc. The swings have been a continual source of pleasure to all members of the school.

The committee were most fortunate in securing the well known teacher of basketry, Mr. Matthias Hollander of South Framingham. The results of the work done under him showed great advancement over that done in previous years.

At the exhibition of the school which was held on August 17, much pleasure and surprise we expressed at results shown. The work of all classes was most creditable.

The total expense for the summer of 1905 was about $850. The expense was lessened by several contributions.

It is not simply that the children are "kept off from the streets," that has caused the growth and success of vacation schools. It is the knowledge that is gradually coming to thinking men and women that manual training means mental and moral strength.

Miss Lillian A. Young was in charge and the instructors in the various departments with the enrolment was as follows: Woodwork, fifty, Joseph E. Owens; basketry, forty-six, Matthias Hollander; raphia work, sixteen, Miss Cora E. Bigelow; cooking, two classes, sixty-one, Miss Stella M. Tyler, Miss Edith Hamilton, assistant; sewing, two classes, eighty-five, Miss Caroline B. Brown; millinery branch, Mrs. S. L. Blue; primary, seventy-three, Miss Grace E. Perry, Miss Amelia Gunther, assistant; kindergarten sixty-four, Miss M. Louise Randall, Miss Nellie E. Terrell, assistant. The games which were participated in by all the scholars were in charge of Miss Florence C. Bacon, assisted by Miss McGrath.

95th Birthday.

Mr. Peregrine Bruce Gilbert celebrated his 95th birthday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Isaac D. White, 61 Bowdoin street, Newton Highlands, last Sunday. Mr. Gilbert is in excellent health and received the calls and congratulations of his neighbors and many acquaintances.

In 1847 and '48 Mr. Gilbert was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives and was one of those who, in the latter year, helped to put through the bill by which Worcester became a city. His fellow-members from Worcester were D. Waldo Lincoln, Alexander H. Bullock and Samuel Davis, and among the members of the house in those years were H. L. Dawes, Caleb Cushing, George S. Boutwell, Fletcher Webster, Francis W. Bird and Otis P. Lord. Of all the members of the Legislature of 1847, William Schouler, a native of Scotland, and afterwards adjutant-general of the Commonwealth, was the only one not of American birth.

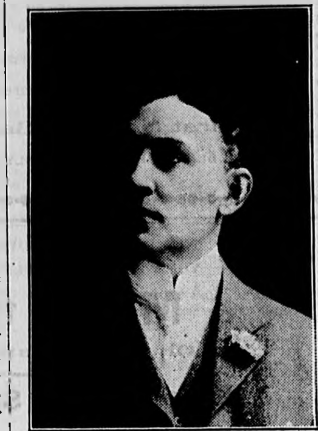

Of Mr. Gilbert's associates in the Legislature of 1847, only Samuel Putnam of New Salem, now in his 99th year, and David Mowry of Leyden, 87 years old, are living, while of his associates in the Legislature of 1848, only Samuel Warner of Wrentham, in his 88th year, survives.

No man is now living whose membership in the state Senate dates back so far as that of the Hon. John S. Keyes of Concord, who represented his district in 1849, when 27 years old.

Mr. Gilbert was born in Pomfret, Ct., Aug. 20, 1810. After living in Pomfret till 1834, Mr. Gilbert removed to Worcester, which had but about 3000 inhabitants. He was in business in Worcester until 1902, when he removed to Newton Highlands.

Mr. Gilbert was married in 1837 to Elizabeth Goddard Rice of Shrewsbury, who died in 1890. Two of his three children are living, Mrs. White, with whom he makes his home, and Mrs. Charles E. Pevear of Pawtucket, R. I. Mr. Gilbert has for many years been a member of the Worcester County Musical Association and the Worcester Horticultural Society.

Norumbega Park

They are great sticklers for decorum at Norumbega Park as one may easily see at the first glance of a visit to this picturesque resort on the Charles from the well kept lawns and gravel paths, and the well groomed floral and shrubbery designs, the neat appearance of the attaches, the entire absence of pieces of paper strewn about the place. But beyond this perfect order which is carried on through a well planned and carefully executed system inaugurated and maintained by Manager Carl Alberte, the matter of decorum on the part of visitors is constantly kept uppermost in the minds of special officers and attaches of the park. The officers are trained to locate the first sign of any disturbing element and the scheme is not to wait until a disturbance has occurred and eject the offender, but to quietly single out any person who gives the least indication of being offensive and gently but firmly invite them out side the confines of the park, present them with the price they have paid for admission and leave instructions at the gate that they be denied re-entrance. In the covered open air theatre this week a musical farce comedy, "The Gibson Girl," is being presented to enthusiastic audiences. This production when presented last season was a huge success and this season with the merry fun maker Phil Ott in the leading comedy role, it is meeting with an even more popular reception. Next week there will be a return to the high vaudeville programme that is the rule in this theatre.

Vacation Notes.

Dear Graphic:—

Every man owes it to himself and to all with whom he is connected, both in a business and social way, to take a vacation each year if possible. If properly taken this should mean a rested mind and body, the result of which will be a larger and superior output both mentally and physically. Keeping this idea in mind and knowing its results from past experience I packed my grip one day in early July and started for Albany, N. Y., via the Fitchburg road.

This line runs through a beautiful and picturesque part of the state, by Fitchburg, Greenfield, Zoar, through Hoosac Tunnel to North Adams and on to the Capitol of New York.

From there my journey went on past Binghamton, Elmira to Jamestown, which is located at the Eastern end of Lake Chautauqua.

A pleasant sail of about two hours on this beautiful sheet of water brought me, weary and travel stained, to Chautauqua with its large assembly and summer schools.

For the benefit of those who are not familiar let me state that the Chautauqua Institution is an Educational organization specially chartered by the state of New York. It involves no benefit of private profit, every penny of surplus going toward permanent improvements. During this season such courses are being taken up as English language and literature; modern languages; classical languages; mathematics and science; psychology and pedagogy; religious teaching; library training; domestic science; music; arts and crafts; expression; physical education and practical arts. Among the many prominent men who have spoken or are scheduled to speak in the auditorium, with its seating capacity for ten thousand, are President Roosevelt, President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, Hon. William Travers Jerome of New York, Dr. Russell H. Conwell of Philadelphia, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse of England, Prof. S. H. Clark and Prof. J. C. Troop of Chicago University. Prof. Baumgartner and at least two score of others. I found shelter at the Unitarian headquarters and received a hearty welcome from the gentleman in charge who proved to be Rev. William Channing Brown, the field secretary for New England, of the Unitarian Association.

Much to my surprise I found among the many pictures on the walls of the living room a framed group picture of the old and new Channing churches and of all the pastors. It made me feel the more at home and I had the privilege several times of telling inquiring visitors of the present beautiful house of worship and its history. Let me describe this place and its unique work a little more fully. It was founded by Bishop John H. Vincent and Lewis Miller more than 30 years ago and its 200 acres of land are equipped for a city and school. It has side walks, sewer system, water works, heating and lighting plants, telegraph, telephone, hotel and cottage accommodations. It is a rest city, a play ground, a festival in the woods, a school house and a place to study the Bible and its history. It is in direct connection with the outside world by lake steamers, electric railways and trunk lines but, notwithstanding this fact it is practically isolated from any large city or town.

The best that is available is procured, great men of pulpit, platform and press, the most accomplished artists of song and public speech, the presidents and teachers of the various universities who give the eager listeners the benefit of their superior education and years of training; all these are to be seen and heard and under the most favorable conditions.

For one to sit in the auditorium or hall of philosophy with nothing but a floor under the feet and a roof, for protection from sun or rain, over the head is ideal. The rustle of the leaves from the surrounding trees is soothing, not diverting, and the gentle breezes, as they waft the summer fragrance to the nostrils are cooling and pleasant. The visitor at Chautauqua must bear in mind that an assembly of this kind gives the opportunity to see and hear men of world wide reputation, leaders in thought and practice, whom they would never see or hear without seeking the opportunity by long travel and great expense.

The people whose desire for instruction is thus encouraged, come in increasing numbers every year and as I watched them on the street, at lectures and entertainments, or in their homes I was impressed with their earnestness and with their firm desire to absorb and assimilate all that was possible.

It has been stated by Chancellor W. H. Hickman that next to the public school, Chautauqua Institution, with its reading circle, its school platform, its civic and altruistic movements, is the most effective instrument in the country for advanced popular education. It offers special courses to Sunday school teachers and at least twenty per cent of the money spent on the platform and schools is for matter intended for ministers and Bible students.

The announcement this week of the meetings of the Republican city committee in the matter of filing nomination papers, is a sure sign of fall. The political pot boils slowly in Newton this year, as there is but little interest taken by the general public in the nominations for which contests are being waged for delegates. In the single matter where the city has a direct and vital interest, for representative to succeed Mr. Warren, there is a most disheartening apathy. This city should send only its very best men to the statehouse the coming year. Men who can wield some influence towards reducing the heavy burden of the state and metropolitan taxes.

The census figures as announced this week are certainly a disappointment when it is remembered that the gain from 1900 to 1905 is only one half of what it was for the preceding five years. It is also disheartening from a political standpoint, for hopes had been entertained that with a population of about 40,000, Newton would surely be entitled to three representatives in the General Court.

Police Paragraphs.

In the police court last Friday morning Mrs. Mary Esposit appeared on a charge of feeding parrots green to the hens of Joseph Vanalot of Nonantum. According to Vanalot the woman killed about 10 hens by putting the poison on corn which he claimed she gave them and that she had threatened to poison him also. The woman denied all knowledge of the affair but was found guilty and placed under bonds to keep the peace. The trouble is said to be the outgrowth of a feud between the two families.

Abraham Shrier, a junkman of Bridge street, Nonantum, was in court Friday charged with receiving stolen property. Several days ago he bought some lead flashing from Dominic Serbino and Joseph Forte each 10 years old which they had stolen from a new house on Edinboro street.
Alfred Murray, foreman on the job, testified that twice had lead been ripped off from around the chimneys of the building. Shrier was found guilty and fined $15. He appealed but later paid the fine. The boys were found guilty. Serbino was ordered placed in the care of the State Board of Charity and Forte placed on probation until November.

John A. Driscoll of Newton Highlands was before the police court Monday for the 18th time. He was charged with pasturing his cows upon land of Dennis M. Sullivan off Winchester street, Newton Highlands, without permission and was fined $8.
James A. Scully, 40 years old living at 9 Wade street arrested about 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning charged with creating a disturbance had his case continued to Dec. 30.

The old case of Abraham Warshak charged with stealing pears from an orchard again came up and Warshak was fined $3.

The case against James Rogers charged with assault and battery was dismissed.

A game of base-ball at the Newton Centre playground on Wednesday between teams of blue coats, captained by Officers Shaughnessy and Dugan was won by the former by a score of 21 to 15.

After a six hour hearing on Tuesday Judge Kennedy found probable cause and held Edward E. Carlisle for the grand jury on complaints charging criminal assaults on Elsie Jepson and Marie Baron.

Washing in Naples.

Washing in Naples is done in any old tub, barrel or dish and generally outside of the house, and by the amount of water used one would judge it to be scarce. Instead of a board a broad stone is used, supported by one stick underneath and the edge of the tub.
Water is cold, and the clothes are hung out to dry in every conceivable place. I saw some towels hung out of a window in the palace. No clothes-pins are used. When one can afford it rings are strung on to the line; otherwise strings are tied to strings, to which a double piece of short string is tied; one corner of the article to be dried is slipped into this and never becomes loose.—Chicago Tribune.

A Curious Fruit.

A writer in the National Geographical Magazine tells of a tree growing in the Malay archipelago, the Andaman Islands and Ceylon, which produces a fruit used in fishing, with results of a remarkable character. The fruit is pounded up into paste and left in bags overnight, after which it is sunk at low tide in deep holes along the reefs. The fish soon begin to appear at the surface, some of them lifeless, others attempting to swim or faintly struggling, with their ventral side uppermost. In this condition the natives have no difficulty in picking them out of the water with their hands.

The Short Eared Owl.

The natives of Alaska say that the short eared owl, which is rather stupid and has a peculiarly shaped head, was originally a little girl. For some reason she was turned into a bird with a very long bill, much like a curlew's.
Finding herself thus transformed, she started up in a wild, confused way and flew plump against the side of a house, compressing her bill and flattening her face.

Pleasant Relief.

of things I want to talk to you about.
Mr. Spenders—Glad to hear it, my

BOSTON AND WORCESTER TROLLEY AIR LINE ELECTRIC EXPRESS.

With the rapid extension of the Suburban free delivery service by all the larger department stores in Boston, the advantage of a rapid and elastic system of transit is needed in order to accommodate patrons who wish to have their purchases delivered the same day as made.

The electric express service makes this possible as the delivery wagons of the large stores can put the packages aboard the car and if the consignee is in a great hurry he can call at the Company's agency upon arrival and procure same without delay.

It affords an added means of transportation for rush orders and one that can be made very elastic, as while the regular express trains are regulated by schedule and the steam roads cannot afford to run extras except at great expense, yet the trolley car can be run out at a moment's notice and with a car crew of two men can accommodate those shoppers who desire to make a late or early delivery.

The impression that the express cars are to be unsightly and thereby possibly be nuisance to people living on the line of the Boston and Worcester is best removed by the accompanying cut, and as it in no way hurts our local expressmen as the company will depend upon them for house to house delivery and collections, we can see no possible objection to the granting of such consent as may be necessary to this company which is certainly building up the southern part of our city.

Mandy's Declaration

By EPES W. SARGENT

Copyright, 1905, by Epes W. Sargent

THE men of Jepson Center said that David Grimes was a shrewd politician, with a clean record, and he deserved to go to congress. The women pronounced him a hard taskmaster and husband, a skinflint, unworthy of the wife who had helped to make him what he was, the political autocrat of Nohara county. But Grimes cared little enough for the latter opinion. Women could not vote. The greed for votes, for political advancement and power was upon him, and the morrow would mark the first great crisis of his life.

From justice of the peace to congressman in eight years! His first election had been a walkover. The office of sheriff had fairly fallen into his lap, and he had gone to the state legislature backed by the solid vote of his party. But the office of congressman was the gift not only of his own county, but of Rock Creek also, and then there was young Jameson of Chadron to be considered. Well, tomorrow's conference would settle the question. Smythe, manager of the great land syndicate and irrigation company which controlled mile after mile of redeemable property and hundreds of votes, was coming from Omaha to attend the county celebration at Chadron on Independence day, to inspect the company's broad farms and to take a hand in the political game.

And David Grimes was to be orator of the day! Flags would flutter; bands would play; cheers would follow his great speech. A strange thrill passed over this usually cold, calculating and self-contained man. Then his momentary enthusiasm died. A light touch rested on his arm.

"David, if you don't mind, I'd like to go over to the celebration with you tomorrow. I ain't been to Chadron in three years, and I ain't never heard you speak in public. I—"

Grimes glanced superciliously at the slender figure beside him, then down the alkali sprinkled street to Morgan's store, where a row of ranch teams announced the presence of voters.

"Chadron won't be any place for women folks tomorrow. There'll be more politics than skyrockets in the air, and I'll be too busy to bother with you. I've promised Brooks, superintendent of the North farm, the extra place in my buggy. Besides, one woman from the family will be enough, I'm thinking, and I've written Effie to stay over for the celebration, being as her teaching there this winter has given her something of a standing with the board. I need all the help I can get just now, and Effie'll make a better appearance than you would. You ain't much on style, Mandy, nor on making up to folks." He said this with the brutal frankness of the self-centered, absorbed individual, and, without waiting for her reply, he strode off toward Morgan's store.

But there would have been no reply. Patient, docile Mandy had long since learned the futility of arguing against fate in the form of her masterful husband. Her first lesson had come twenty years before, when, after a brief wedding journey to see "David's folks," they had stopped off at Chadron to buy the simple furnishings for their new home. Mandy, steeped in the fairyland of new furniture, had been brought back suddenly to reality by the brusque tones of her husband.

"That red plush sofa ain't goin' in to my parlor. You might as well understand now and for good that a long as I pay the bills I expect to run my own house."

Even in the midst of her pain and disappointment Mandy had noted with a sense of relief that the clerk was out of hearing. Later there had come brief minutes when woman's faithful weapon, tears, had missed the mark; then days of depression and nights of wide-eyed staring into hazy blackness or silvery moonlight, and at last broken pride, a hopeless yielding to the inevitable. The idea that her bonds might be loosed had never entered Mandy's head, nor had she considered it within her province to lay the burden of her disappointment and grief at the feet of her gentle mother or her impetuous, generous old father. And so in time the man of decided opinions had developed into the domestic tyrant, and the pretty girl he had wooed and won "down in Knappton county" became a silent shadow in her own household, more bearer of humbly, unrequited burdens.

Mandy closed the door and dropped dejectedly into the nearest chair. She glanced at the mirror opposite, and a mist came before her eyes. Yes, she was getting old and haggard. If David went to Washington, Effie must accompany him. Yet it was her own efforts to save, her daily drudgery, that would provide the means. In a vague way Mandy realized that to the honest man politics is not always a profitable vocation.

Her reverie was interrupted by voices in the front yard, a girlish treble asking eager questions, then a boyish falsetto exclaiming excitedly:

"Say, Effie, won't you give me a quarter? There's going to be a circus in town tomorrow, and dad says I can't go, and he won't take me to Chadron nor—"

The door flew open, and Mrs. Grimes, all a-tremble with mingled delight and apprehension, drew her daughter inside.

"Oh, Effie, dear, it's so good to see you! An' you're lookin' just fine, not a bit as if you'd been worryin' with them children through this hot spell. But what will your father say? He's expectin' you to wait over in Chadron for the celebration an' hear him speak. He'll be dreadin' put out about your son-in-law. Dear me, what a lot of bundles! I'm 'frank, you've been wastin' your hard earned money, an' your father won't be pleased at all."

They lines formed around the girl's mouth, but her voice was gentle.

"Let's go up to my room, mother, dear, and we'll open the packages. I have so much to tell you."

But once within the shelter of the dormer windowed room Effie Grimes turned strangely silent. It required several minutes to remove her hat and replace the pins at the proper angle. Then she unpacked her small hand bag and arranged with elaborate care her few toilet articles on the crocheted bureau mats. Her mother watched each move with anxious eyes.

"Effie," she asked in tremulous tones, "I hope it ain't young Jameson. Your father is most eternally set against him an' your havin' anything to do with him. An' you know your father."

Effie was hidden in the closet. It took her some time to find just the right corner in which to tuck her hand bag. When she finally emerged her face was quite pale, but her voice was quiet and even.

"Yes, I ought to know father. I've lived in the same house with him long enough." Then, seeing that her bitter tones had brought the old shadow to her mother's face, she continued gently: "We won't talk any more about Ed—I mean Mr. Jameson. I want you to see the new dress I bought you."

The color flew to Mrs. Grimes' face. She clasped her hands together nervously as Effie untied the package, and a proud light shone in her eyes. Effie, her eldest born, had given first thought to her, had bought her a dress with the first money she had ever earned. Yet force of habit prompted the next words.

"You hadn't ought to, dear, an' your father won't like it. He was just sayin' this mornin' he expected you'd have a nice nest egg in the Chadron bank. You know he believes in savin'."

Effie straightened up, her eyes blazing, her face set and determined.

"I haven't saved a cent, not a cent, do you understand? And I know what he believes. Heaven knows we've had his theories drummed into our heads with breakfast, dinner and supper ever since I can remember. I have paid my board, and what was left over was mine to do with as I liked. I don't consider that I owe my father a cent of it. He brought me into the world, and it was his duty to care for me, yet he begrudged every mouthful I ate. He never took any interest in me until I became a breadwinner—until some one else saw my worth."

She stopped, horrified at the white, shocked face of her mother. Then she flung both arms round the trembling figure and held the little mother tight.

"I don't mean to be wicked, but I can't help it. Only I do love you, mother, dear, and, oh, I wish I hadn't!" She caught her breath and turned quickly to tear open one of the packages, from which she took out a ready-made dress of black and white lawn, trimmed with narrow black lace.

"There it is, mother mine!"

For a time the older woman sat silently picking at the narrow edging which had become crumpled in carrying. Her touch was almost reverent. It had been so many years since she had owned a whole new dress. Then two great tears of joy splashed on the insertion which crisscrossed the front of the waist.

"Oh, Effie, how did you know I'd dreamed of havin' a dress like this every summer for five years? But I'm afraid you spent too much for it. That lace cost a dollar a bolt if it cost a cent. Then there was the makin'!"

Two cool, firm hands drew away the dress, and Effie—tall, self-contained Effie—slipped into her mother's arms and clasped both hands about her neck.

"Mother, dearest mother, you make me feel so utterly selfish, you who made me whatever I am, who gave me the best there was in you for me, to see you make such a fuss over a little gift. I ought to have done so much more. I ought to have gone to work for you years ago. And I ought to—"

Again that conscious look, that sudden catch in the voice, and she handed her mother another bundle, from which tumbled a gown of sheer white lawn trimmed with delicate lace.

"The very thing for you to wear to the celebration tomorrow with your father!" exclaimed Mrs. Grimes, unimpaired of her own disappointment.

A quizzical smile played about Effie's lips, and she stroked the white gown lovingly.

"Do you think there is any celebration worthy of this dress? Besides, I'm not going to Chadron. I hate speeches and fireworks." And the two women went downstairs arm in arm.

It was not until bedtime that David Grimes broached the subject of the celebration. His wife had been called to the bedside of a sick neighbor, and he sat alone with Effie on the porch.

"You'd better take the 9 o'clock train for Chadron tomorrow. I want you to be on hand for the exercises, but you can't go over in the buggy. I've promised Brooks a ride with me, and I'll need him to pull strings with Smythe. It's going to be a great day with me, Effie."

"I hope so, father," said the girl smoothly, "but I don't care to go. Mother will be lonely here, and I shall stay with her."

Then, as if the matter were closed, she rose and walked deliberately in the direction her mother had taken. For a moment David Grimes sat as one stunned; then there rushed into his mind the dozen or more effective answers which he should have made to this open rebellion. So much for letting one's children leave home and achieve independence! He would have a settling with this high handed young woman, but not tonight. He must reserve his energy, his diplomacy, his voice, for the morrow. There was much at stake on the morrow.

A narrow trail of white dust against a cloudless blue sky was all that told of the departure of David Grimes for the scene of his anticipated triumph. Arrayed in broadcloth and linen, respectively brushed and laundered by Mandy's hands and carefully hidden by a long linen duster, he had climbed into the best buggy, which had been led to the gate by the disconsolate Jimmy. The latter, barred from both celebration and circus, felt his patriotism oozing rapidly from his grimy finger tips. Effie laid a caressing hand on his shoulder and said:

"Well, Jimmy, I guess it is just about time for our celebration to begin." Something hard and shiny slid into his hand. Jimmy gasped. Never before had he owned a whole dollar. "For the circus, part of it, dearie, and the rest for cannon firecrackers. Be sure you get an extra large one and shoot it for me. You know I'm afraid to touch it off myself."

And with a smile the girl drew her mother's arm through her own and started back toward the house. Mrs. Grimes protested feebly against the extravagance, but Effie laid a loving hand over her mother's lips.

"I must—I must do something perfectly wild. I am so happy."

But there was a suggestion of tears in her voice, and her hands this morning were not cool and firm, but hot and trembling. Mandy turned anxious eyes on her firstborn.

"Effie, you ain't acted natural since you come home. What's on your mind?"

"You, just now," came the quick response. "I don't like to be selfish, but

"I'm afraid you spent too much for it."

I am so glad you did not go with father to the celebration, for—, you see, mother, dear, I am going to be married today, and it would be hard not to have you at the ceremony."

They had reached the house by this time, and Mrs. Grimes dropped weakly into the nearest chair. Effie knelt beside her.

"You mustn't blame me too much for not telling you before, but I was afraid father would find out. He would never give his consent to my marrying Ed. There is nothing but political ill feeling on his part, for Ed Jameson isn't another enemy in the world, only father is afraid of him, afraid of Ed's power in politics. We love each other, and I want a home, a real home, not an abiding place, oh, I don't mean to hurt you, but you must understand that father ruined my girlhood, just as he has ruined your life. I don't want to teach; I am not suited for the work. And I do love Ed. He could not come to the house all summer long, and I am too proud to meet the man I love like a thief in the night. So we are going over to the Methodist minister's this morning and be quietly married. And there is where all my money went. I have all my clothes and my linen."

During Effie's long and at times halting speech Mrs. Grimes had offered no interruption. She sat as in a dream, perhaps a dream of the day long years before when she, too, had been a bride. But at the words "clothes and linen" she started as one stung to the realization of an unpleasant fact.

"And you've done this all alone! Your father and mother ain't had any hand in gettin' your outfit, ain't done a thing for you! A world of hurt pride, of motherly despair, rang in the words, and then she turned pleadingly to her daughter. "Don't you reckon if you waited a day and things went right at Chadron for your father he'd feel better natured and we could have a wedding? I don't want a daughter of mine married without any wedding!"

We don't want to take any chances, mother, and I promised Ed to be ready when he comes, so bring your bonnet and I'll fasten on some fresh roses. You must look your prettiest for my wedding day."

Silently Mandy left the room, but when she returned a few moments later she carried, instead of the bonnet which had been "freshened" annually for five years, an old fashioned steel head purse. The expression of her face, even her bearing, had undergone a subtle change. She stood erect, and the lines had disappeared from her face, now illuminated by a sudden resolve that seemed to restore her lost youth.

"Effie, we've just got to have a wedding. It shan't be said that a daughter of mine was married away from her home an' without a weddin' dinner. We've got the whole day before us. It's only a little past 7, an' I've got a little money of my own that I've been savin' for somethin' just like this."

In her excitement she had forgotten that the nickels and dimes had been laid aside to buy new underwear for her "laying out," a custom prevalent in her family for many generations which for her lacked any element of grossness. "We'll have some of the girls you went to school with. There's Mary Harter—she said she wouldn't go to the celebration because she hates cannon an' noise—an' Lucy Burns didn't get her new dress finished. You get them two to help us fix up the house with flowers." Mandy fairly quivered with happiness and new found powers, while Effie stood dumfounded in the presence of this sudden assertion of maternal rights. "I've got chickens a-plenty, and there's time to beat up a couple of cakes. Thank goodness we didn't eat up all of that best apple jelly. Now you run for the girls while I set Jimmy catchin' the chickens. If Ed comes while you're gone I'll send him right over to engage the preacher."

And Mandy Grimes, rejuvenated—nay, born anew—hurried, with a soft tune on her lips, toward the barn, where Jimmy was rushing through his chores as only a small boy with a silver dollar burning a hole in his pocket can hurry.

In the dull blaze of the midsummer sunset David Grimes drove slowly toward Jepson Center. The seat beside him was vacant, and the dust fell unnoticed on his black suit and withered linen. His duster at this moment hung on a peg in Chadron's principal livery stable. The superintendent of the North farm had remained over for the fireworks and ball. The pyrotechnics in the bosom of David Grimes were sufficient to satisfy that gentleman fully, and he had been glad to escape from the gaping, applauding crowds at the county seat—that that his oration had failed to win the approval of his constituents, but there are occasions when constituents are unavailing. This had been one of them.

It had all happened at the conference, when, with the plaudits of the crowd still ringing in his ears, he had heard Smythe state as bluntly as he could have worded it himself that a younger man should represent the district in congress, and the young man which his company, and incidentally Rock Creek county, had in mind was Edward P. Jameson, who had attracted considerable attention by his skillful handling of a big lawsuit in Omaha. The autocrat of Jepson Center had bowed to the powers as represented by Smythe and had walked proudly, erectly from the room at the close of the conference.

Jameson! If it had been any one but that conceited upstart, who had been forbidden his house! It was well that "the rising young politician," as the Chadron Bugle called him, had not been at the conference.

"Hello, Mr. Grimes!"

The dethroned autocrat jerked his horse to a standstill. A bent figure sidled up to the buggy. It was only "Pap" Burns, but he had a vote, and from habit Grimes forced a genial greeting.

"You don't mind givin' me a lift rest up the way, do you? Thanks! It is warm, an' them cren tents is the bakin'est places. I seen your Jimmy there. It was a blamed poor show, but he seemed to find the lemonade an' peanuts to his likin'." Chances ain't what they was when you an' me was boys, Dave. Now, when—"

The garrulous old chap chattered on, but Grimes did not listen. He made a rapid calculation. Jimmy had spent not less than 75 cents—wasted money. Mandy might not realize the gravity of his own political downfall, but she should be made to understand the terrible extravagance of which she had been guilty. But where had she got the money? She had accounted for every cent he had given her in years. If she had sold some of those Legions to send Jimmy to the circus—his face turned purple, and he gave his horse a vicious cut. Wasn't it enough to watch his political balloon pricked by a man with a pull without coming home to rebellion in his own household? The memory of how Effie had quietly ignored his expressed wish the night before rose afresh.

He pulled up before the narrow path leading to his front door and, knotting the reins about the whip socket, called grimly for Jimmy. There was no response, but he caught sight of a strange face in the kitchen doorway. It was Poorhouse Jenny. In one hand she held a dish towel; from the other she munched a thick slice of cake. As she strode up the walk his feet ground on flower petals and rice into the gravel. There he did not notice, for suddenly Mandy appeared at the door. She wore a new dress. There was a pretty color in her cheeks, a sparkle in the eyes that yesterday seemed faded. She was frail and slender, and the stalwart, frowning man could have crushed her aside without an effort, yet somehow she seemed to bar his entrance. He paused before her with an imprecation.

"Where's that boy, and what's Poorhouse Jenny eatin' the cake I paid for as free as if it was black bread?"

The figure in the doorway trembled slightly, then seemed to turn rigid.

"I paid for that cake, David, out of my savin's. An' it's Effie's weddin' cake. She's gone. She left goodby for you, but she didn't want no scene on her weddin' day. It's been seemin' ev'ry meal we've set down to in years, an' she's tired of bein' hecctored to death. I don't know as I blame her for wantin' to get away from such a life. I'm goin' over to Chadron next week when they come back from Omaha."

He turned and walked toward the house, but he did not go in. He stood in the doorway, looking at the house, and then he walked back to the buggy.

an an' help them furnish their house. Edward said I should."

Mandy smiled reminiscently. She should certainly buy a red plush sofa for Effie's parlor if there was one in town. Then she looked back at her husband. His hand grasped the porch post, and his face was distorted with rage.

"I've mean to say she married that Jameson? And you helped her to sneak out of her father's house like—like—"

"That's just what she didn't do, David. She was married right here in her mother's parlor an' with some of her old friends for witnesses, an' we had a dinner. There ain't no use for you to swear an' carry on, David. I am her mother, an' I ought to have some say. I'm goin' to have some say, too, about the house. I've helped you pay for it an' everything that's in it, an' the law gives me a share of it. You told me yesterday I wasn't much on appearances, but that's your fault. No one that's lived the shut in life I have would be. I'm goin' to live like other women do, an' I'm goin' over to Edward's an' Effie's every month. Edward, he said—"

The name was as a red rag to a bull. David Grimes smote the piazza railing with his fist.

"D'ye know that smooth faced, lying young rascal has got the promise of the nomination to congress, which was mine by rights? He's beaten me, beaten the father of his wife, and stole his wife in the bargain. He's—"

Mandy Grimes drew herself up, and more than ever the doorway seemed barred.

"Well, all I've got to say is that I'm glad the nomination's been kept in the family. An' as for the rest, I don't want any scene made here. There's been scandal enough about the way you treat your family without your shoutin' so the whole neighborhood can hear you. If you was half as proud of your folks an' treated them half as decent as you do your voters we wouldn't be the talk of Jepson Center. I'm plumb sick of bein' spoke of as 'poor Mandy Grimes.' Now, if you have any swearin' to do you march out to the barn an' do it. I've got to help Jenny clear up the weddin' dishes. Your supper 'll be ready in ten minutes."

She turned abruptly and walked into the parlor. Her husband stood transfixed as she disappeared; then his grip on the porch rail gradually loosened. His expression changed from fury to amazement, to incredulity and finally to thoughtfulness. Without a word he turned on his heel, walked down to the gate and led his horse round to the stable. Poorhouse Jenny, picking a chicken bone, watched him curiously from the pantry window. But Mandy, alone in the dim, disordered parlor, clasped and unclasped her hands nervously.

"I declare I don't know how I ever did it. I ain't quite sure whether it was what Effie and Edward said or just because it was Independence day. If I'd known he'd take it so well I'd read my rights years ago. But I have some good times comin' yet. Edward says he's goin' to take me to Omaha in the fall. I don't suppose it's a wifely way to feel, but I'm glad Edward beat him for the nomination. Havin' that lesson kind of took the life out of him an' made it easier for me. Yes, Jenny, I'm comin', an' you can put the rest of that weddin' cake out for Jimmy an' Mr. Grimes' supper."

In their efforts to teach children parents are often surprised by the original views which the youngsters take and by their presentation of views which, while they may be but partial, are at least correct and discriminating so far as they go.

It occurred to a father who noticed a carpenter hammering upon the roof of a distant house that he would give his little son, eight years old, a lesson in physics by calling attention to the fact that the blows of the hammer could be heard before the sound made by them could be heard and explaining that the difference in time between the seeing of the blows and the hearing of the noise was due to the fact that light travels much faster than sound.

He sought to introduce the subject by asking the boy if he understood why it was that he could see the hammer fall before he could hear the noise of the stroke. He was astonished to receive the reply, "Yes, it's because my eyes are nearer to the hammer than my ears."—St. Nicholas.

How Sea Urchins Swim. Sea urchins, or "sea eggs," have a queer method of locomotion. They are protected by sharp spines, but these spines do not cover all the surface. This is divided up into segments, like a rough rind of melon. The narrow segments are pierced with holes. Through these small holes the "sea eggs" protrude little tubes, which act as feet in the following curious way: The animal inflates the tubes in the water from little suckers at the back, and in this way it pushes itself forward. The tubular feet are fitted to every side of the creature, which is thus enabled to move in any direction it pleases.

Comforting News. It takes a good deal to upset the New Englander's equanimity. A New Hampshire farmer was driving past a country house and witnessed the tragedy of a child falling into a well. Instead of rushing, appalled, to the scene he observed that plenty of help was at hand and jogged stolidly on. About a mile below lived an aunt of the little girl whom the accident had befallen.

"How do, Mib' Faith?" he drawled to the woman shelling peas by the kitchen door. "I jus' seen your sister's little an' fall down the cistern. I guess she's drowned." Then, having delivered his news, he drove on.—Lippincott's Magazine.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Director.

There are privileges and advantages connected with the student life at the New England Conservatory of Music that mark it an institution of unusual efficiency. The remarkable equipment and strong organization for musical education have resulted from a growth of more than fifty years. The material increase is significant, but of greater importance is the experience that has come with these fifty years of progress. Today, no school in America can contribute as much and none in Europe offer more toward a musical education than the New England Conservatory of Music.

Every branch of a musical education has a special master. The student's capacity sets the only limitation to his progress.

Owing to the practical training of students in our Normal Department graduates are eagerly sought as teachers. Practical Pianoforte Tuning Course in one year.

Detailed descriptions of Courses are best told about in the year book which will be sent on request. Address
